Prince Charles Weds Lady Diana

World Watches Pageant Of British Royal Family

By R.W. Apple Jr.
New York Times Service

LONDON - In a blaze of martial and spiritual pageantry oo a glorious high summer morniog, the Prince of Wales — heir apparent to the British throne — Wednes-day took as his wife Lady Diana Spencer, a shy and charming member of one of the kingdom's major

The 2,500 guests inside St. Paul's Cathedral, the hundreds of thousands who watched the wedding party ride in magnificent horse-drawn carriages from Buckingham Palace to the cathedral and 700 million television viewers around the world witnessed a fairy tale come to life: the handsome prince in naval uniform marrying the lovely 20-year-old daughter of an earl amid the son of spleodor that the world has all but forgot-

All the panoply of monarchy was deployed on this, one of the great days in the history of the House of Windsor — the stirring music of Handel and Purcell and Elgar, the Household Cavalry in their burnished breastplates and helmets with red plumes, the stately royal horses caparisoned in silver, almost all the reigning sovereigns of Europe in their finery, and the royal bride herself, resplendent in a gown of pale ivo-ry, with puffy sleeves and a train 25 feet long.

It was a day that symbolized for the British people the continuity of the monarchy and thus of the nation itself, a day that many will recall as a punctuation mark in their own lives, a day that afforded surcease from a summer of joblessness, urban unrest and problems in Ireland. It was a day that provided "a flash of color on the hard road we have to travel," as Sir Winston Churchill described the marriage of the prince's mother. Queen Eliz-

Personal Touches

Speaking in a sense for the entire kingdom, Robert Ruccie, the archbisbop of Canterbury, con-cluded his sermon with these words: "May the burdens we lay on them be matched by the love with which we support them in the years to come. However long they live, may they always know that when they pledged themselves to each other before the altar of God they were surrounded and supported not by mere spectators but by the sincere affection and active prayer of millions of friends."

And yet there were small touches, some planned and some unplanned, that showed that this was a personal as well as a public occasioo. Lady Diana, flustered, changed the order of the prince's name in plighting her troth; he, in turn, omitted a word in his part of the ceremony as he slipped the simple band of Welsh gold onto the third finger of her left hand.

Then, to the astonishment of everyone, royal starchiness evaporated entirely as the newlyweds left in an open landau for Waterloo Sta-tion to take the train to Broadlands, the country house in the south of England where they will spend the first stage of their boneymooo. On the back of the carriage was pasted a sign, hand lettered oo butcher paper, announcing that they were just mar-ried and fied to the footmen's bench was a bunch of heart-shaped silver and blue balloons.

For the vast throngs that lined

The Mall, the Strand, Fleet Street and Ludgate Hill, it was, as many of them said, a magical experience. Tens of thousands of them had slept on the pavement to be assured of vantage points. They were in a uniformly exuberant mood, singing, waving flags, cheering as loud as their lungs would allow and, in some cases, dancing in the streets. The policemeo and troops deployed in an enormous security operation were io an equally good humor, and no serious incidents of any kind were reported.

Sea of Humanity

After the carriage procession had returned to the palace - the prince riding with his princess, the queen with the bride's father, Earl Spencer, and the Duke of Edinburgh with the bride's mother, Frances Shand Kyod - the police lines were withdrawn. A great sea of humanity, excited but orderly, filled The Mall from Admiralty

Diana Garbles Bridegroom's Given Names

The Associated Press LONDON - In the final moments before she became Princess of Wales on Wednesday, Lady Diana Spencer made her first slip, speaking the bridegroom's names in the wrong order before the husbed congregation at St. Paul's Cathedral and bundreds of millions of television viewers But she was not alone. Prince

Charles left out a word in repeating his yows. Lady Diana, in a dress with vards of veil and a 25-foot train, gracefully made the difficult exit from her coach at the foot of the cathedral steps. She glided down the red carpet of the long aisle at her father's side without a false step.

But when the Archbishop of Canterbury spoke the prince's name for her to repeat - Charles Philip Arthur George -she promised to marry "Philip Charles Arthur George." The Prince of Wales, after placing the band of Welsh gold on his bride's finger, offered to share his "goods," dropping the Arch to the palace gates, perhaps a quarter of a million people.

In a few minutes, the royal family appeared and then reappeared on the balcony that lonks down on the Victoria Monument, When the 32-year-old prince kissed his bride, something he had not done in the cathedral, the delirious cheers resounded across central London and mingled with the pealing of church bells.

Voices of critics of the monarcby and of the wedding were muted. Many had gone to France or to Ireland for the day to demonstrate their disapproval, and some demonstrated their distaste by releasing black balloons over London. But they constituted a tiny minority.

Lady Diana, a former kindergarten teacher whose forbears include the first Duke of Mariborough as well as Churchill, is now formally Diana, Princess of Wales - not Princess Diana, because only someone born a princess may use that style. But one day, all being well, she will be Queen Diana as the wife of King Charles III.

Robert Moses Dies; N.Y. 'Master Builder'

WEST ISLIP, N.Y. — Robert Moses. 92, the builder who changed the face of New York during decades of unparalleled power, died here Wednesday of heart failure, a spokesman said. Mayor Edward I. Kocb said Mr.

Moses "will forever be known as the master builder. I have ordered that flags on city buildings be flown at half staff through Friday in memory of Mr. Moses, who among his varied posts served as New York City's parks commis-sioner from 1934 to 1960."

"I was very sad to hear about it," former Mayor Abraham D. Beame said of Mr. Moses' death. "He was a very dear friend and an outstanding public servant. He was a real master builder, and the city, the state and the country will lose a great man."

Mr. Moses began his rise to power in 1934 when Gov. Alfred Smith named him chairman of the Long Island Parks Commission and the state Council of Parks.

Control Grows

From that small base, Mr. Moses landed other posts that brought him control over construction of roads, bridges, parks, pow-er projects and buildings. Known as the "man who gets things done," Mr. Moses oversaw the construction of virtually every major artery and many bridges and parks in the New York area, including Jones Beach, the Triborough Bridge, the Long Island Expressway, the Hutchinson River Beltway, and the Southern and agara power projects; urban re-

projects; and 650 play-

"In the 20th century, the influence of Robert Moses on the cities of America was greater than that of any other person," said Lewis Mumford, the city planner and architecture critic.

Personal Assessment But Mr. Moses' assessment of himself was more modest: "I make no elaim to being at once an internist, pathologist and taxidermist of the body politic," he said in 1975. "I'm just a senior ditch-digger."

Mr. Moses was 6 feet tall, powerfully built and given to awe-some rages, but he also was eloquent, magnetic and dynamic. He was born in New Haven, Conn., the son of Emanuel and

But the heart-shaped color photographs are pasted not onto plate glass, but onto sheets of plywood that were nailed up to protect the tiny shop 21/2 weeks ago when rioters ripped through the center of this industrial city 100 miles (160 kilometers) north of London. "There were mobs throwing petrol bombs and bricks all over this oeighborhood," said A.Y. Bhikhu, an East Indian immigrant who owns the store and now worries about it constantly

As Britain celebrates the royal wedding Mr. Bhikhu's sheets of plywood are a grim reminder of what will still be a troubling reality long after all the red, white and blue bunting has been taken down — the urban disorders that so shocked a nation proud of its lawfulness and

"The government can make whatever fuss it wants to about Charles and Diana," declared a 22-year-old unemployed man who said he had taken part in the rioting in Leicester. "Sooner or later it's going to have to think about us."

Littered Playground

He and a group of friends who were whiling away a sunny morning in a littered playground outside a public housing project said they had not heard about the emergency employment program for youth that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher announced Monday. When told about it, they were skeptical.

"What future will it bring to Leicester?" one of them asked. "I'll believe it when I see it." A textile producing center that used to be very prosperous, Leicester began declining economically before the current

Despite the cootrast between the splendor of the royal wedding and the plight of the unemployed, there were few signs of resentment. "I expect that even in the riot areas, you'd find everybody watching the wedding on television," said Peter Lowman, an official of the Normal Union of Hosiery and Knittners Workers. "Because her me in Roman Union of Hosiery and Knitwear Workers. "Remember, we in Britain don't have an anti-royalist or republican tradition. And as for contrasts between rich and poor, well of course there are people right here in Leicester who seem to the poor to be as rich as Prince Charles is."

Downstairs in the union headquarters, the receptionist shyly disagreed. Although the office, like most offices in Britain, was given a holiday Wednesday, she would not watch the wedding, she said, "because it doesn't seem right, such an elaborate occasion, with so many people out of jobs." In London, William Hamilton, a Labor member of Parliament who is a critic of the royal family, condemned the wedding.

Noting that the procession Wednesday passed within a few miles of Brixton, one of the neighborhoods hit by rioting, Mr. Hamilton said: We have multi-deprivation within miles of ostentatious wealth. The riots were not by wealthy people, bot by colored and young people who were deprived and who did oot know when or how they are going to get a job, a house or a decent education."

In Leicester, as in more than a dozen other British cities, much of the mob fury seemed to be directed at the police, and it was multiracial.
"These are very bad times, and very bad things are happening. I doo't know when things will ever be right again," said Mr. Bhikhu, staring at the inside of his plywood panels.

WASHINGTON — FBI agents believe they may have cracked the main illegal gunrunning operation from the United States to guerrillas of the Irish Republican Army. They have evidence that a leading figure io the Provisional IRA entered the United States illegally in March, and they believe he may stili be here.

The arrest of three men in the New York borough of Queens last month followed a long investiga-tion in which agents posed as gun dealers and were allegedly offered $16,000 in cash by the men for au-tomatic rifles and handguns. The discovery of Mr. Cahill's passport has led agents to believe they may have uncovered a wellorganized channel for gunrunning across the Atlantic. Six hunger strikers have died so far, and on Wednesday two others, Kieran Doberty and Kevin Lynch, reached their 70th and 69th day without food. The prisoners, in jail on such charges as murder and carrying explosives, are seeking political status and have made five demands - the right to wear their own clothes, special work, more visits by friends and relatives, time off for good behavior, and free association with other nationalist prisoners.

Pentagon Report

WASHINGTON (IHT) - The Defense Department has con-firmed published reports that it believes Japan, Canada and Den-mark are not carrying what the Pentagon considers a fair share of military spending in common defense programs.

"Japan, the non-NATO country included in this report, ranks last or next to last on all of the ratio measures surveyed and thus quite clearly appears to be contributing far less than its share or what it is capable of contributing," a De-fense Department report said.

Portions of the report were obtained by the International Herald Tribune and published on April

The study also said that "regard-less which measure of burden sharing is used, in virtually every case Canada bas the lowest performance of any NATO country." It excepted Luxembourg.

It said that France and the Netherlands carry about their share while West Germany, Belgium. Norway and Italy were maintaining slightly below their share.

The study, entitled The 1981 Department of Defense Report on Allied Commitments to Defense Spending," is confidential. Penta-gon' officials say they wanted it made public but State Department officials objected for fear it would offend allies

Unclassified Material

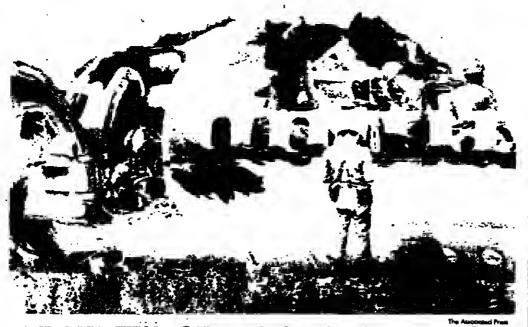

Sen. Cari Levin, a Michigan Democrat on the Armed Services Committee, obtained a copy and recently read parts of the unclassified material into the record. Other parts of the report were described by officials. The study was prepared under the direction of the assistant secretary of defense for international security policy. Ricb-

The United States, according to the report, "appears to be doing somewhat more than its fair share of the NATO and Japan total." It said that the United States increased its military spending 5 per-cent a year in 1980 and in 1981 while the others did "no more than 2 percent for 1980 and 2.5 percent to 3.5 percent for 1981."

In a summary of findings, the report said: "There is no single measure of burden sharing that gives a comprehensive view of al-lied contributions to the common defense. Some indicators used in isolation can be misleading."

The report compiled several indicators, such as the percent of gross domestic product expended for defense, the percent of the labor force in military service, the annual changes in military spending and the indirect expenses such as West German expenditures for West Berlin.

"Using this composite measure," the summary said, "the Department of Defense report concluded that Turkey, Greece, the United Kingdom and Portugal are carrying at least their fair share."

Anti-Semitism Reported Down in U.S. But Support for Israel Seems Weaker

Casey Orders CIA Review,

By Steven R. Weisman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - William J. Casey, the director of central in elligence, has ordered a review of CIA contracts to develop what he called "additional protections" against the transfer of technology and information by former agents to such countries as Libya and the Soviet Union. In a speech Monday to agency employees, a copy of which was later made available to The New York Times, Mr. Casey specifically referred to the recent episode in which two former CIA agents, Edwin P. Wilson and Frank E. Terpil, win P. Wilson and Frank E. Terpil, used their agency connections to travel to Libya to train terrorists he had declined to accept intelli-

Referring to the CIA general counsel, Stanley Sporkin, Mr. Casey said in the text of his speech: "Stan Sporkin is reviewing our contracts to develop additional protections against the kind of moonlighting and use of our contractors and technology which oc-curred in the Wilson-Terpil situa-

The purpose of Mr. Casey's speech was to reassure CIA employees that he intended to weather the current controversy over his past financial practices and management of the agency, which have led to calls for his resignation by three key Republican senators, including Barry M. Goldwater of Arizona, chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee. [Mr. Casey predicted that "it's going to be a cakewalk" as he went into a closed hearing before the Senate Intelligence Committee on Wednesday to answer questions about his past business dealings and management of the CIA, The Associated Press reported. He was accompanied by Mr. Sporkin; William E. Simon, the former Treasury secretary; and aides carrying two large black document bags. [On Tuesday, Mr. Casey's mood became more confident as his counteroffensive showed signs of making headway. "The bottom of the barrel has been reached and there's nothing there," he said.

"My life is an open book."

[An aide to Sen. Richard G. Lugar of Indiana, a Republican on the committee, declared that the matter had been "laid to rest." Sens. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas and Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont, both Democrats, said they had seen nothing yet to justify Mr. Casey's resignation.]

In his speech on Monday, Mr. Casey - seeking to counter criticism of his handling of the agency - said he bad taken and would take several steps to improve agency operations.

Asserting that intelligence estimates had in the past not reflected "the full range of threats which our policy-makers need to protect against." he said that he had on occasion refused to accept estimates prepared by agency analysts. Generational Change

There was no strong correlation between anti-Semitism and negative attitudes toward Israel, Miss Clark said.

The poll was taken in late February and early March, before Israel bombed a nuclear reactor in Iraq and a largely Palestinian district in Beirut, two actions that aroused widespread criticism in the United States.

The survey, based on 1,215 in-terviews nationwide, found that anti-Semitism was declining largely because the U.S. population is changing to include more young, well-educated people who tend to be more tolerant of diversity than their elders, Miss Clark said,

Seventy-three percent of non-Jews said they could accept a Jew as a presidential nominee, and 66 percent said they could accept Jews as marriage partners for their children; but most Jews said they believed a majority of Gentiles would answer otherwise.

Price of Liquor in India Keeps Bootleggers Busy

By Stuart Auerbach Washington Post Service

NEW DELHI - Take a handful of rotten fruit. Mix in bark from a nearby tree, some coarse brown sugar, chicken droppings and old shoes to speed up the fermentation process. Boil it up and add methyl alcohol for extra kick.

That, according to United News India, is the tried and true recipe for "black bightning," a locally made moonshine similar to the kind of bootleg liquor that killed at least 345 persons in the southern Indian cities of Bangalore and Mysore earlier this month.

It costs about 25 cents a bottle about one-fourth the price of the cheapest legal liquor. The high cost of legal liquor, mainly caused by the strong streak of prohibitionism in a country that encourages state and federal governments to levy high taxes on al-cobolie beverages, makes bootleg-ging a flourishing trade in India.

Sold by the Glass

In New Delhi alone, for instance, newspapers estimate more than 5,000 gallons of bootleg booze are sold each day — most of it to poor laborers who cannot afford the cost of legal drinks.

A bottle of moonshine here costs $2, about one-third the price of the least expensive legal liquor sold in New Dehli. But more important for the laborer whose daily wage is about $1, moonshine can be bought by the glass. In Bangalore, for instance, a glass of the killer "black lightning" costs about 6 cents, a bottle 25 cents. The illegal liquor trade in Bangalore was given a big boost this year when the price of the most common type of Indian-made liquor sold in the legal shops was doubled to aimost $1 a bottle.

In Bombay, Indians need a permit to buy alcoholic beverages, and in Madras a doctor must certify a person as an alcoholic for a permit.

As a result, according to reports from Bangalore, bootlegging has become such a big business that at least 10,000 persons distribute the illegal liquor to 500 shops. There are three times as many illegal liquor shops as there are li-censed hars, and the daily take of the bootleggers is reported to be more than a quarter of a million

While these reports may be ex-aggerated, they illustrate the mag-nitude of the illegal liquor operations in this country where, as in the United States during Prohibition, bootlegging appears to be in-timately connected with politics and police.

Desai's Failure

A 40-year-old man known as "the hooch king" of Bangalore, Amir Sultan, was reported to have fled the city after being warned that police were after him. He bas since been arrested in Madras.

While bootleg liquor deaths oc-cur throughout the world, the problem in India appears to be compounded by a national ambivalence toward the consumption of alcohol. Total prohibition is a stated aim of India's constitution, and former Prime Minister Morarji Desai, a dedicated opponent of drinking. tried during his more than two years in office to drag the country kicking and screaming toward that By all accounts, he failed. For one thing, the states lost hundreds of millions of dollars in tax reve nues on liquor. For another, moonshine, which kills thousands of Indians and hlinds thousands each year, flourished. When Indira Gandhi returned to office 18 months ago, the national drive toward prohibition ended. While Mrs. Gandhi said she believed that people should not drink, she said she doubted whether a government ban would stop them.

By Helen Dewar and Spencer Rich

WASHINGTON - House and Senate conferces formally signed a compromise agreement Wednesday providing for domestic spending cuts of more than $35 billion next year.

The action was hailed by Sen. Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico, Republican chairman of the budget conference, as "the single most historic effort at controlling federal spending in the nation's histo-

The agreement, which contains more than 250 law changes and was the product of 58 subconferences between House and Senate, will go to the House for approval and then to the Senate. With 281 conferees representing both bouses, it was the largest legislative conference in the history of the U.S. Congress. Capitol Hill sources anticipated quick adoption by both houses, with the House expected to act on Friday and the Senate either Fri-day or Saturday. President Reagan was expected to sign the measure during the weekend.

Wednesday's action was a formality. The conferces wrapped up the compromise Tuesday night. It provides for cuts in domestic spending for next year that total between $35 billion and $36 billion - roughly the amount that Congress instructed its committees to save in spending-cut orders two months ago. In separate bills, the House had approved savings total-ing $37.3 hillion, and the Senate $38.1 hillion, leaving room for slippage in conference.

The break in the budget reconciliation logiam came when con-ferees rejected Mr. Reagan's pro-posed lid on growth of Medicaid spending in favor of a reduction in projected costs of 3 percent next year, 4 percent in 1983 and 4.5 percent in 1984. The compromise was estimated to save about $1 billion

"The bill is done," Sen. Baker, a Tennessee Republican, told the president by phone late Tuesday

Hurdle Cleared

A major burdle was cleared earlier Tuesday when conferees reached a compromise on health block grants that leaves family planning as a separate program and provides funds to promote teen-age chastity.

As the evening wore on, with conferees shuttling between rooms off the Senate floor, bargainers resolved low-income fuel assistance at $1.87 billion, roughly the curence, both because of the sensitive rate are family planning, child imnature of the programs and be-munization and health services for cause of reluctance on the part of

White House fully behind him. The conferees' compromise combines 20 of 26 health programs into three block grants to the states, cutting spending in the process by 25 percent, or nearly $1 bil-lion, over three years. For some programs, such as mental health and alcohol and drug-abuse control, states must spend their federal funds as before, although they can start shifting some in future years. Community bealth centers will be maintained in a separate block grant.

Among other programs kept sepa-migrants. In a bow to conservatives, the publican who is chairman of the conferees agreed to enlarge the existing adolescent pregnancy program to include up to $16.6 million for research and counseling to deter sexual promiscuity among adolescents, including what skeptics called "store-front chastity

Another knotty issue was re-solved when the conferees approved a procedure for the sale of Conrail, the money-losing subsidized freight railway system for the Northeast, that could keep Conrail operating under government subsidies through September, 1984. The administration wanted to sell it off more quickly.

Kremlin Mocks Madrid Talks

The fundamental trade-off in the 1975 Helsinki agreement was Western acceptance of the division of Germany for Soviet permission for the West to monitor human rights in the East bloc. Now that the second conference to review the Helsinki accords has recessed again, well short of consensus, it is a good time to review some of the things that have happened since it opened in November, 1980, and also some of the things that happened in preparation for its opening.

In the months before the Madrid meeting. the KGB decimated the ranks of Soviet dissidents, concentrating on the so-called Helsinki Watch Groups, but arresting opponents of Soviet totalitarianism across the spectrum. The most spectacular action was the internal exile of the great human rights activist Andrei Sakharov, but Baltic nationalists, religious activists and lesser-known men and women in the human-rights field were also arrested, and imprisoned, exiled or sent to psychiatric bospitals. The arrests continued during the Madrid meeting. Now, the systematic critics of the particularly venemous Soviet practice of sending political dissidents to meotal bospitals bave been totally silenced. The crackdown has not been equaled since Stalin's time.

Remember, Germany remains in two parts and no one is suggesting that it be otherwise. What good would it do if they did? The legitimacy of the Soviet-sponsored East German regime was fully established at Helsinki.

The West, of course has monitored human rights in the Soviet Union. But to what end? Yuri Orlóv, Anatoly Sbebaransky, Alexander Brailovsky, Tatyana Osipova, Vasily Baratz, Juri Kukk, Matt Niklus, Alexander Lavut and Leonard Ternovsky, along with many others, are all in prison, exile or the gulag. Their representatives have appeared at Madrid and note has been taken of the prisoners' condition, but no one can do anything about it. The Russians may release a dissident if they want something badly enough, but they will decide what it is they want and which human they will trade for which bene-

It is argued that there are advantages in just baving an ongoing forum for dialogue with the Soviet Union and its satellites. Some contend that the confined dissidents are getting more publicity, and therefore their chances of being released sooner are improved, because the conference on Cooperation and Security in Europe is taking place. Much weight is being given to the prospects for arms control talks focusing on East-West confidence-building measures, which have been discussed at Madrid. Small progress, at least on paper, has been made in the fields of countering terrorism and reunification of

But on the basic bargain, the overwhelming advantage so far has gone to Moscow. And chances are that the Soviet Union would reap the greatest benefits from a European arms control conference by exploiting the differences in the Western alliance. Virtually nothing happened at the first review conference in Belgrade, and it is beginning to look as if that might be the best achievable result from Madrid.

The Wedding, at a Distance

Perhaps the most famous episode of "Upstairs, Downstairs" was the one in which Edward VII came to dinner at 165 Eaton Place. The crowd outside the Bellamys' cheered when he arrived; the servants peering from an upstairs landing beld their breath. No one of them was close enough to see a quite ordinary man with a cough. Kept at a distance, by class and centuries of protocol, they saw Distance is what fuels a fantasy. Too little, and the object loses mystery; too much, and it loses visibility. For centuries, the British royal family has correctly gauged the point at which man and myth marry. As human beings they are, like all of us, dispensable; as embodiments of history, they have been invaluable, Britain occupies a small space in the world now, but there was a time when it occupied almost all of it. The link between these eras is that same royal family. In celebrating the marriage of its eldest son, and with the extraordinary pomp and ceremony that is uniquely theirs, the British people are also celebrating themselves. They are, after all, still here.

Progress on Whaling Front

Whaling Commission last weekend approved again defeated a proposal for an indefinite moratorium on all commercial whaling. To its credit, the Reagan administration continued the U.S. support for the moratorium that now extends through four presidencies. Interior Secretary James G. Watt was responsible for appointing and backing a dedicated conservationist and whale expert to head the U.S. delegation.

Since the IWC began setting quotas for commercial whaling the allowed worldwide catch has fallen from near 50,000 to below 15,000. Whaling from immense factory ships has been banned. A sanctuary has been established in the Indian Ocean where whales may not be killed for 10 years. These are significant achievements requiring, as they do, the cooperation of many nations. But whaling is still allowed for several species that are on the international endangered species list. Of what were once the many species of the world's largest - and, don't forget it, largestbrained - creature, only the small minke whale has not been hunted by man to the point of scarcity or near extinction.

Now that there are inexpensive substitutes for all whale products, including the use of whale meat for human consumption, there is little excuse left for continued commercial killing. Yet endangered industries die hard.

The good news is that the International Despite the fact that sperm whales cannot be eaten because of their dangerously high levwhat amounts to a ban on the killing of els of mercury, and despite their precariously sperm whales. The bad news is that it once small numbers. Japan fought hard against the complete ban on killing sperm whales that was recommended by the IWC's scientific advisers. The partial ban that was finally adopted included an exemption for the western Pacific and an offsetting increase in Japan's quota of minke whales. Yet the Japanese delegation made no secret of its dissatisfaction with the outcome.

Little by little the pressure of international opinion is eroding the now unnecessary whale trade. Only the Japanese market keeps it alive. Ultimately a ban seems inevitable. The danger is that it will come too late. Among all animal species, the whale's survival seems to be peculiarly chancy. Once a decline in the numbers of a particular type of whale can be documented, the process often seems to be irreversible. Many whale species — including the largest, the Great Blue have not yet recovered after decades of protection. The reasons for this unusual behavior are not known. It may have to do with the small number of whale offspring, their long infancy, and the whales' wide range.

Until the answers are known, a moratorium, not the let's-wait-and-see-what-happens justification for annual quotas, is the only responsible policy. Perhaps next year the IWC will take the last needed step.

Poland: A Bleak Future

Even if credibility is achieved the immediate future looks bleak. Poland's external debt is now more than $27 billion and there is a huge shortage of hard cash not only for completing investment projects but also for supplying industry with raw materials and parts to keep production going.

Contrary to what many people think, the sharp drop in production has not been caused only by a reduction in the working week, and hardly at all by the strikes, but to a significant extent by shortages of components and other supplies from abroad.

On U.S. Effectiveness

There can be little doubt that Washingtoo's economic policies will not only demand sacrifices from America's citizens but will also have consequences for Europe that we would prefer to do without.

But it would be senseless to demand that President Reagan should change course, just when he has adopted policies that Europe had been urging on his predecessor for years.

What Europe cannot do without is a United States that is economically healthy and by consequence politically effective.

Has China Heard The Last of Mao?

By Ross Terrill

WASHINGTON - China has been discussing its problems more frankly lately, and now candor has reached a point of an official declaration that Mao Tse-tung made "grave blunders." In every society, conflict and evil have their explanations, whether religious or secular, and, since the death of Mao in 1976, China has blamed bad things in its recent history on the so-called Gang of Four, the Shanghai lefusts headed by Mao's third and last wife, Jiang Qing. The spirited Jiang helped undermine that explanation by insisting during her trial "that she acted only on Mao's orders. "I was his dog," she said.
"What he told me to bite, I

The shadow of disillusion at Chinese Communism's failures has now fallen on Mao's mausoleum. Mao is being sliced up to suit the current Peking leaders, and portions of him are being consigned to the trash can labeled "Gang of Four," while other portions are being salvaged to protect the legit-macy of the Chinese Communist state.

The Origins

What were Mao's achieve ments and failures? Has Peking solved the delicate problem of his legacy by the extraordinary 35,000-word revision of history issued recently?

A strong Communist move-ment would have existed in China without Mao — be was not the key figure in its origins. Yet the Chinese Communist Party would not have won power by 1949 if Mao had not become its leader in the 1930s.

And Chinese Communism without Mao would have been less distinctive from other varieties of Communism.

One of Mao's achievements, and in the end one of his problems, was that his impact was sustained through various stages of China's modern convulsion. He lived long enough to be the Marx, the Lenin and the Stalin, rolled into one, of the Chinese revolution.

More than 50 years ago, he was China's Marx as he analyzed the ills of a feudal China assaulted by foreigners. He became the Lenin as he led the rebellion that seized power through encircling the cities with a peasant army. After 1949, he put oo a third hat as China's Stalin, and tried to build a oew socialist China; this was his least successful pe-

As a unifier, Mao ranks with two or three of the great uni-fiers in the history of China, a nation comparable in size and diversity to the whole of Europe, where political unity has often been absent. As a recaster of Chinese society, only three or four emperors in China's his-tory could be compared with him. And he was a man with a doctrine, a combination of emperor and sage - rare in China and in the politics of most nations.

A Nervous Asia

Mao could also claim that under his rule China stood up in the world. The "sick man of Asia" recovered enough to make parts of Asia nervous at Mao's three decades of rule made China more socially just than it had been. Rewards came to derive mainly from work done, no longer according to birth, or land or capital pos-sessed. The basic tools for advancement, health care and a simple education, ceased to be commodities available to be purchased only by a minority. Yet Mao's record was mixed, at home especially, for as a man and politician be had strong prejudices and was inconsist-ent. He often zig-zagged be-cause he did not care to follow a policy through to its full implementation. He saw the problem of bureaucracy in China, but was impulsive rather than structural in his attempts to surmount it.

Sadly enough, Mao, who was himself a rebel, presided over a rigid system of political propaganda that cowed intellectuals. He said he wanted "personal liveliness" among citizens, yet he left behind a sullen populace that had learned by experience not to stick its neck out.

Mao never really settled down after 1949. He never quite managed to turn pristine revolutionary values into modes of operation during the first victory years. He was much less good as a manager of economic development than he had been as an iconoclast, teacher and warrior.

Something in Mao rejected

any plateau of success. To the consternation of colleagues, he would try to summon back the old values of the road. Issues of economic policy, the key to all that. Mao in his prime boped for China, sometimes seemed to bore him. Unity and trust within his government he gaily jetti-soned in order to launch his Cultural Revolution.

Hated the Old

In the end, the China that Mao produced changed even though he could not change, and so his relations to China's politics changed. The greatest irony was that the man who hated the old ("I hated Confu-cius since the age of 8") ended up cleaving superstitiously to an ideology, Maoism, that others began to find anachronistic.

Mao had been a modernizer, but the modernizer could not — perhaps never can — fully take his place in the ranks of the moderns. For Mao's generation, economic development was seen only in terms of national power. Today's young Chinese see it more in terms of individual well-being. For Mao. the enemy was oot merely feu-dalism but capitalism. For a new generation of Chinese, feudalism is certainly an enemy, but capitalism has a lot of ap-

"You must not always think that you alone are indispensa-ble," Mao once told an audience, "as if without you in the world the earth would not spin and the party would not exist. Do you imagine that, because butcher Chang dies, people af-ter that must eat pork covered with bristles? No need to fear anyone's death. Whose death would really be a great loss?
Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin — aren't they all dead? The revolution must still go on."

But Mao's revolution could not really go on without Mao. Now that the revolution is over, China needs engineers and managers, not warriors and theorists.

Critics

Yet China may not have heard the last of Mao. Precisely because he was the Marx-Lenin-Stalin of China's revolution; the government of Deng Xiaoping and his selected lieutenants, Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang will have to protect him at least as a symbol of the Chinese

WASHINGTON — "Although Jack Straw was hanged," Disraeli once wrote of a notorious English rebel. "a Lord John Straw may become Secretary of State." The point commands the attention of Americans at the time of the Royal Wedding. For it traces the tie between snobbism and democracy. That tie was the hallmark of British greatness. It is now fraying, which explains a certain decline.

The monarchy stands at the head of British society. Kings and queens, princes and princesses, may be deaf to music, blind to art and indifferent to literature. They may lack elegance in dress, wit in conversation, discrimination in choice of friends and flair in parties and other amusements.

Fact of Birth

Still, the Royal Family is the first family in Britain. It is hedged. as the service at St. Paul's Cathedral indicates, by a certain divinity. Its affairs take precedence, and its favorites enjoy advantages tr. politics and business. That so much should be conferred by the mere fact of birth asserts the role of the royals. They personify an unequal society, a society dominated by gradations — of birth, of wealth and of ability.

The respect accorded to the Royal Family, in other words, is diffused generally throughout the kingdom. Aristocrats enjoy a piece of it, of course. So do successful men of business. Similarly political figures who have made their mark. and leaders in the armed forces and the clergy. Even those most remote in spirit from the court scientists and artists and intellectuals - share in the privileges the royals exemplify.

The self-assertion of those privileged orders, in fact, gives to liber-ty in Britain, indeed to Anglo-Saxon democracy in general, its spe-cial flavor. The first barrier against autocracy was built by the barons at Runnymede in the Magna Carta. Puritan notables, most of all

John Milton, articulated the case for freedom of conscience. The Whig magnates in the Glorious Revolution of 1688 asserted the right to self-government. The captains of industry, in the Reform Act of 1832, made an indent for the voice of business in the ruling of the realm.

Slow Process

and slow to take effect, but unmis-takable and irresistible, the victories achieved by the privileged or-ders were generalized. Over the centuries, freeborn Englishmen of Britain, across the board, is clearly on the wane now. The challenge to authority may prove insurmountable. There may not always be an England — or not at least the one so renowned until the second half of this century, But even if it represents the afterglow of a glorious sunset, the Royal Wedding teaches a lesson in statecraft. As Bagehot put it in a fa-mous passage of The English Constitution more than 100 years

No feeling could neem more childish than the enthusiasm of the English at the marriage of the Prince of Wales but no feeling could be more like human is ture as it is, and as it is likely to be. A princely marriage is the brilliant edition of a universal fact, and, as such, it rivets manifold. C1981, Lot Angle: Times

Laurence Olivier observed some years ago, of working with Mr. Wyler on "Wuthering Heights," that the director "despised me for my suobbish attitude about film. That was resolved five years later when I made 'Henry V.' Wyler taught me a lot about film."

Mr. Wyler strove to make his films simple and clear. He had both the reputation of a stern taskmaster and a flair for showing his ate Class master and a flair for showing his stars off to excellent advantage. Bette Davis gave three of ber greatest performances for him, in "Jezebel," "The Letter" and "The Little Foxes.

Those who won Oscars in Wyler films included Greer Garson ("Mrs. Miniver"), Fredric March and Harold Russell ("The Best Years of Our Lives"), Olivia de Havilland ("The Heiress"), Audrey Hepburn ("Roman Holiday"), Mr. Heston ("Ben-Hur") and Barbra Streisand ("Funny Girl").

The long and short of Saint Laurent.

Fashion

Saint Laurent Goes Short

By Hebe Dorsey

DARIS - At Yves Saint Laurent's, the bride wore black and a sequined tiara, and currseyed to Catherine Deneuve and publisher John Fairchild. She and her two ruby-velvet-clad bridesmaid and page carried red rose booquets. That was the only spoofy reference at his collection Wednesday morning to the royal wedding, and only a contunier as secure as Saint Laurent would compete with the event in London.

For people more interested in fashion than in royal romance, it was a rewarding morning. Saint Laurent, whose influence is worldwide, came up with the final word on skirts: short. Despite some longer raincoats, the line was way above the knee. The look was further strengthened by very skinny skirts and three-quarter topcoats; the models wore sheer black stockings and high-heeled pumps or Saint Laurent's pampered version of short Western boots.

Saint Laurent, who until lately had pushed pants, now seems to have lost interest in them. His collections in the past bave been solid pants, but this time he showed only five or six. The news was the change of proportions introduced by the short-ening of the skirts. The shoulders remained strong and the most attractive topcoats had wide, round lapels, roomy armholes and full sleeves. The result was young and up, and made long skirts look like a drag. It is also dangerous, as it is based on a reed-thin silhouette; even Saint Laurent's fans, many of wbom are all skin-and-bones, will have a hard time wearing the unexpurgated version.

Unlike Ungaro's collection, which is next to impossible to copy, Saint Laurent's is going to be imitated in ready-to-wear in no time. The models that will hit the streets fast are the brightly colored suits with black braid embroideries, the black sweater-suit with white satin collar and the threequarter, bubble-shaped coat lined with silver fox.

With a house in Marrakesh, with the bazaars. That comes out in no end of Oriental touches turbans and golden leather fezes, jet-embroidered belts, braids and tassels everywhere, sweeping desert-king capes and blouses em-broidered like caftans.

When Saint Laurent leaves the Orient, he is off to Scotland with a great number of pleated tartan skirts, coupled, as usual, with his beloved black velvet jackets.

The suit was all-important, especially the dinner suit, which has also been on other designers' minds. A dinner suit is that chic yet comfortable garment that will take a woman practically every-where except a big ball. It has a delicious blouse that acts as a beautiful frame when one is sitting down at the table. Saint Laurent's brightly colored ones were nice, but the best was black, slightly shaped and worn over a long tunic and a short skirt.

Another, which was a break for small women, was n dinner suit with a short, fitted, black velvet jacket, the lapels faced with white satin. Underneath was a black tank top with tiny straps, well suited to doll-sized women.

The most amusing of the evening wear was the patchwork skirts whose colors and patterns, Saint Laurent said, were inspired by Ma-tisse and Leger (a follow-up to his Picasso collection two years ago).

Impeccable Givenchys

If Saint Laurent is for the adventurous, Givenchy is for secure, well-groomed women who need not get excited every season. A Givenchy dress is always a good investment, for it has that impeccable finish that comes with good breeding. Le grand Hubert was very much on the same wavelength as Saint Laurent, but his clothes came out looking far more staid.

There, as at Saint Laurent, were the skinnny - but not as skinny wrap-around skirts, the three-quarter coats (but swinging out instead of falling straight), the velvet touches, the gold leather piping, the tunics over skirts. The skirts, hitting just under the knees, were short by Givencby's standards.

There is one area where Givenchy, who could be called the last pillar of the fashion temple, cannot be touched: evening gowns. His are serious creations for women who are going to wear them at $1,000-a-plate charity balls as well as around their fancy Long Island and Palm Beach homes.

Many of the gowns are deliberately low-key, to accomodate the wearer's emeralds. The exceptions were the richly embroidered, bright-color velvet boleros, the bicolor mink jackets set over gold leather, and the shiny gold gauzedraped beauties, slit to the knees, which managed to be both elegant

Archaeology

Looting Imperils Maya Artifacts

WASHINGTON — Many of the most prized archaeological sites of the Maya Indian civilization are being destroyed by looters motivated by the high prices paid for artifacts on the inflated international art market, according to the National Geographic Society.

The problem is particularly critical in Guatemala—the heart of what was once the great Mayan civilization—where the present pace of looting could destroy everything of archaeological value in less than 20 years, experts said.

"It's a race between scholarship and thievery," said George E. Stuart, an archaeologist with the society. He said looters often destroy sites before archaeologists have a chance to study them or authorities know

"Guatemala has become the most seriously endangered archaeological area in the Western Hemisphere," added Clemency Coggins of Harvard

There are no U.S. laws banning import of such artifacts. The experts said the best hope of slowing the illicit art traffic is a hill pending in the gau, a really good "Midsum-mer Night's Dream" seems to conte along roughly once every 10 years and at Stratford this summer we have the first memorable exploration of that play since Peter Brook had his men up on the flying tra-pezes. Within a framework resem-bling a Pollock's Toy Theatre, the kind wherein Victorian children would recreate stage epics in mini-ature, the director Ron Daniels offers a lyrical, deeply romanue pro-duction complete with a full-blown Stephen Oliver score that might have been written for David O. Selznick.

There is perhaps a slight confusion of images: Bottom and his merry men appear at first to be stagehands within this Victorian theater, though there is no sugges-tion that Theseus or Hippolyta are therefore only actors. Equally, Titania's fairies are magically and wonderfully performed by stick puppers operated in almost Ka-buki fashion by black-garbed at-tendants, while Puck is a defiantly human black comedian forever leaping out of costume baskets or up through trap doors like the demon king in a pantomime.

Curiously, none of this much matters, so overwhelming is the beauty of Maria Bjornson's moonlit forest and so confident the play-ing of the strongest Royal Shakespeare Company cast seen on their main stage in many a long night. Mike Gwilyn and Juliet Stevenson double Theseus-Oberon and Hippolyta-Titania without making great distinctions hetween their characters, but they preside with just the right air of majesty and charm over a world in which most of the work is done by the lovers and the rude mechanicals.

Among the former, Jane Carr as Hermia confirms that she is the funniest classical lady to have turned up since Lynn Redgrave departed for the United States, and among the latter Geoffrey Hutchings is a wonderfully understated Bottom. This is an evening of quite remarkable beauty and insight and of constant stage spectaele, by far the best reason to journey to Stratford in many a long

If it's an English musical you're after, at the Apolio there's Mike Harding's "One Night Stand," ef-fectively a sort of local "Grease" in which the career of a deadbeat rock group of the early 60s is set against a tapestry of teen-age life in the provinces at that changing time. Harding is more a stand-up comic than a playwright, and his dialogue sounds like chopped-up his of a monologue spread interchangeably among whatever characters happen to be on stage. But in a tacky and very funny produc-tion by Kenneth Alan Taylor, originally for the Oldbam Coliseum, we do get some remarkable glimpses of showbiz life when the glittering prize was a season on the pier at Yarmouth. At times "One Night Stand" seems to have been not so much written as cobbled together from bits of "Billy Liar," "Comedians" bits of "Billy Liar," and "Once a Catholic," with occa-

George Ringo and Bert" thrown in for good measure; at others it seems unsure whether to be celebrating or criticizing a world Harding evidently knew all too well, since he was a member of the original Stylos rock group. But he has come up with some superbly parodied chart-bottomers of the period, including one dedicated to bad aone, and in the end "One Night Stand" is about the awfulness of failing when the Beatles were just starting to succeed.

Edward Bond's "Restoration" at the Royal Court is an extraordinarrly if not loonily brave attempt by a contemporary writer to come up with a completely new Restoration comedy and then add to it a series of equally original semi-Brechtian songs. That it works even patchily is a miracle, and to complain that it gets a bit boring at times is like noticing that a man walking on water is wearing the white, town against country, jus-tice against corruption) and in the end immorality generally wins through. But what makes an overlong and indulgent production (also b) Bond) come to life are the performances, most notably Simon Callow as the funniest fop since Olivier did his Tattle 15 years ago and Philip Davis as the wrongly accused servant.

Bond is, here as ever, going on about the battles of an unfair life (rich against poor, black against

> I wish I could share my colleagues' enthusiasm for Ostrov-sky's "The Forest," now in the RSC repertoire at the Warehouse in Covent Garden. It seems to me, soporific rerun of "The Govern-ment Inspector" with Alan How-ard shamefully encouraged to warm over his strolling players from "Wild Oais" and with Richard Pasco and Barhara Leigh-Hunt allowed to overplay so much that we lose the sense of reality. What might have been a sharp pre-Chekhovian saure about a couple of actors winkling money out of a miserly old lady on a country es-tate in 1871 Russia becomes instead an excuse for a lot of sweaty sub-classical mugging.

At the Cambridge Theatre in London, "One Mo Time" is another black anthology musical, this one rather better than "Ain't Misbehavin'" because, as well as the songs (25 in all, from "Muskrat Ramble" through "Tiger Rag" to "My Man Blues"), we get some sort of a plot, largely concerned with the backstage agonies of being a black touring troupe in a white man's theater in the New Orleans of 1926.

John Stell mugs unashamedly as the trascible white theater manager, Vernel Bagneris (who thought the whole show up) is the loosestlimbed dancer since Ray Bolger, and Sylvia Williams, Thais Clark, and Topsy Chapman do the backstage hickering with the same ferocity and drive that they bring to

The Bride's New Family: Thoroughly Human, Yet Resolutely Apart

By R.W. Apple Jr.
New York Times Service

ONDON -- When Lady Diana Spencer married the Prince of Wales on Wednesday, she became a member of a most extraordinary family - a family that can trace its descent from Charlemagne, Egbert of Wessex and George Washington; a family in which no one has a job, in the usually accepted sense of that word; a family whose members can almost never decide on the spur of the moment to go to a movie or eat in a restaurant or spend a weekend out of town; a family whose influence resides in not being seen to exercise it; a family that symbolizes the British nation yet is mostly of foreign blood.

This curious family is headed, of course, by Queen Elizabeth II, the 41st monarch since William the Conqueror, a small, rather plain woman. 55 years old, with a lovely complexion, an instinct for the ordinary and a devotion to the middle-class ideals that have been shared hy British sovereigns since Victoria: family life, good works and diligence. Beyond that it is difficult to define the royal family, since different people mean different things when they use the phrase.

According to Charles Kidd, the editor of Debrett's Peerage, that bible of the English aristocracy, it can be conveniently restricted to the first 22 people in the line of succession to the throne" - from Prince Charles through Marina Ogilvy. 14, the daughter of Princess Alexandra, whose father was a brother of King George VI. But that definition leaves out the Duke of Edinburgh, the queen's consort, as well as the queen mother, whom most people would certainly include, and other husbands and wives. The Earl of Birkenhead pondered the question for a time and declared, "It in-eludes anyone to whom I instinctively bow."

but not everyone has instincts as finely honed as his. Others say that the family consists of those who get government grants through the Civil List, the parliamentary funding bill, but that omits the Prince of Wales himself, who lives on the income of the duchy of Cornwall. A 32-Name Definition

Perhaps the best, if not the briefest, definitioo is this one: The royal family comprises the direct descendants of King George V, who reigned from 1910 to 1936 (and their spouses, if any) except for the Lascelles family, headed by the Earl of Harewood and his brother, Gerald Lascelles. The earl and his brother (who is so little known that he is oot even listed in "Who's Who") are first cousins of the queen as are the Duke of Keot, the Duke of Gloucester, Prince Michael of Kent and Princess Alexandra - but since the Lascelles are sons of King George Vs only daughter, rather than one of his sons, they are on the fringes of things. For example, they rode to the wedding in ordinary limousines, not in the procession of horse-drawn carriages. They could have become honorary members of the royal family, as did the late Earl Mountbatten of Burma, whose blood relationship to the queen was more distant than theirs, but the Lascelles family's relations with the crown have been chilled by Lord Harewood's penchant for unconventional behavior. He divorced his first wife and had a child by his second before they were married, and built a distinguished career as an opera scholar and impresario (he currently heads the English National Opera). He sometimes expresses controversial views about such things as public schools, which he considers breeding grounds for snobbery. Not at all the sorts of things members of the royal family feel they can do. This definition gives us a total of 32 persons - 17 adults and 15 children - who compose the current inner circle of the House of Windsor. It was founded in 1714 by George I, the ignorant and obstinate German duke who succeeded Queen Anne, as the House of Hanover, renamed Saxe-Cohurg and Gotha in 1901 and renamed Windsor in 1917.

A Rare Englishwoman

These 32 constitute an extended family, and they can be divided into three more or less nuclear groups: that of the queen, including her mother, her husband, their four children, one son-in-law and two grandchildren, and her sister and her sister's two children; that of the rather reserved Gloucesters, including the duke Jan architect before he succeeded to the title and was forced to abandon his practice), his mother, his wife and their three children; and that of the Kents, including the duke, his wife and their three children, his brother, Prince Michael, his wife and their two children, and the duke's sister. Princess Alexandra, her husband and their two children.

In all of the veins flows more foreign than English or Scottish or Welsh blood. It is not only that the founder was a German; it is also the proclivity of British sovereigns and sovereigns to be for marrying foreigners. Queen Victoria married a German prince; King Edward VII, a Danish princess; King George V. a German princess, and Queen Elizabeth II, a Greek prince of mixed Danish, German and Russian lineage. For centuries, only King George VI. who married a Scot, and Prince Charles, the first heir to the throne since 1659 to marry an Englishwoman, have managed to find mates on British shores.

Nor are all of the members of the royal family royal or even noble by hirth. The Duchess of Gloucester is the daughter of a lawyer from Hans Christian Andersen's hometown, Odense, Denmark: Princess Anne's husband is an English commoner, the son of a director of a sausage factory: Princess Alexandra's hus-hand is the second (and therefore non-noble)

THE BLOOD ROYAL The members of the current British royal family, according to one view, are the descendants of three of the sons of George V. From this trio — George VI, Henry and George — flow three royal branches: the Queen's immediate family, the Gloucesters and the Kents. The circled numbers on the chart show the order of succession to the throne.

son of a Scottish earl. Indeed, the queen's grandson. fifth in the line of succession to the throne, has oo title at all; he is simply Mr. Peter Phillips, although a dukedom might be granted to him.

The role of the queen and her family is illogical and mystical. They depend for their authority, indeed for their very existence, on a certain suspension of disbelief, a certain unspoken willingness to pretend on the part of her subjects. In theory, the voters could elect a government committed to the abolition of the monarchy. That they have not done so, that they have seldom sent more than a handful of republicans to the House of Commons, shows the power of continuity and symbol and myth in a world supposedly committed to rational-ism and radical change. But it also shows that the oueen and most of her relatives have understood that their role is to embody the decency and civility that the average Briton sees as the best qualities in himself and his nation.

The royal family is a symbol, like a national flag or anthem, and as such it must stand for the oational interest, never for partisan or class advantage. It must provide a common denominator. Yet, by definition, it is something apart; there can be only one royal family. Queen Elizabeth II has resolved this paradox, one of many in the monarchy, by combining seemingly contradictory qualities. She remains a thoroughly human woman on one level and an icon on another. She has understood, as many of her critics have not, that an ordinary person with ordinary values is better equipped for the role of constitutional monarch than a political or creative genius.

Neither the queen nor the other members of the royal family attempt to set styles, and usually they do not, although the Lady Diana haircut and the frilly high-necked hlouses she favors have created temporary vogues. Manufacturers and shops that earn the royal warrant "By Appointment to Her Majesty the Oucen. Manufacturers of Soap and Detergents — Procter & Gamble Limited, Newcastle-upon-Tyne") invariably display it, but that is more a matter of pride than of commercial advantage. The family reflects the values of the more socially conservative, more deeply rooted among ft is this conservatism, together with a fami-ly tradition established and passed along to each succeeding generation by Queen Elizabeth's great-great-grandmother, her grandfather and her father, that accounts for the generally hland faces presented to the world by most of the members of the royal family. Not one Briton in a million could differentiate the personality of the Duke of Gloucester from that of the Duke of Kent; only the maverieks among the rank-and-file royals, as the British public and press habitually refer to them, es-tablish individual images.

Patience With the Wayward

Being a British sovereign or the close relative of one entails costs as well as privileges, and one of the former is the suppression in some circumstances of spootaneity and indi-viduality. It was impossible for Edward VIII. later the Duke of Windsor, to accept this, and it has proved very difficult for Princess Marga-ret to do so, and their failures cost them dearly. Not that the queen behaves toward her family in an imperious manner, rewarding those who toe the line and punishing those who do not. By all accounts, she has been pa-tient, far more patient than her mother would have been, with the wayward. It was she, for example, over her mother's opposition, who effected a reconciliation between the family and the Duchess of Windsor, the American divorcee, Wallis Warfield Simpson. Her authority flows, in the family as in the able, almost magical fact that she is the queen. Like any human being, she is subject to the influence of those around her. While he lived, Lord Mountbatteo was a persuasive counselor. He formulated the plan for Prince Charles' unusually rigorous education.

On family matters, the queen mother is in-fluential. The Duke of Edinburgh, parmer in a highly successful marriage, is known to have aped some of the queen's views. He persuaded her, to cite one instance, to consent to the making of the television film "The Royal Fam-ily," which did much to humanize the monarchy in the eyes of the public.

country as a whole, from the single, undeni-

Inevitably, as well, the queen's private secretary has an influence on her speeches, her relationships with government ministers and many other matters. The incumbent, Sir Philip Moore, 60, a bomber pilot during World War Il and a former international rugby star, has been on the palace staff since 1966 and assumed the top joh in 1977. But no member of the family and no royal retainer challenges the queen's decisions once may are the defeat him challenge a prime minister and then defeat him on a bill or in a general election; the only way to defeat a queen, within the relatively narrow range in which her writ runs, is to depose her.

Doing a Professional Job

Within the royal family, only the queen has a constitutional function. She takes it very seriously, spending as many as four hours a day reading state papers delivered to her in leather dispatch cases, and meeting every Tuesday evening with the prime minister. (She is good at the job; former Prime Minister Harold Wilson calls her "the most professional head of state in the world," and adds, "My God, she put me through it if I hadn't done my homework.") But she must never seem to take any partisan role. The ancient polinical fiction must be maintained that she — and, to a lesser do-gree, the other members of the family — are served by the government, when in fact the reverse is much closer to the truth.

lo most circumstances, the queen is restricted, in the classic formulation of the 19th-century historian, Walter Bagehot, to the right to be consulted, the right to encourage, the right to warn." It is conceivable, however, that she might choose the next prime minister if the new Social Democratic Party wins enough votes to create three relatively evenly balanced party blocs in the House of Commons. In that case, constitutional authorities say. Queen Elizabeth would been titled to send for whomever she chose to form a new govern-

The other adult members of the royal family share with the queen her symbolic and ceremonial roles. Like the sovereign, they serve as pa-trons of worthwhile organizations (hospitals, orchestras, clubs and the like), often helping them to raise money. They dedicate bridges. airports, city halls. They attend fetes and opening rights. They meet distinguished visi-tors. They show the Unioo Jack abroad.

On a typical day this month, like the executives of a large public relations firm (Monarch and Associates?), the royals were out and about, promoting worthy causes and their

'And Then You've Got to Go'

"Work" like this requires infinite patience, a capacity for endless small talk, deadly hours of boning up on statistical and political minutiae, and an arsenal of smiles. In his new book about the Prince of Wales, Anthony Holden tells of a Qantas stewardess who exclaimed to the prince during a flight, "God, what a rotten, boring joh you've got." Charles told the story to the Cabinet led by James Callaghan at a private dinner in his honor; and all laughed politely. "But no," said the exasperated prince, you don't understand what I mean. She was

The worst part is that normal conversation is all but impossible. In an interview last year on BBC radio, Prince Charles said, "You have to hreak through a certain amount of anxiety or nervousness or prejudice or whatever to start with, and it usually takes about 20 min-utes. They're maybe beginning to realize that you're vaguely human, and then you've got to go." Perhaps that is one reason why, when a cross section of Britons were asked in 1979 whether they would like to be born into the royal family if they had a chance for a second life, 93 percent answered no.

The queen mother - the "Queen Mum," as many call her, probably the most popular member of the royal family — manages to do it all with a relaxed and cheerful air. Her sparkling smile and frumpish clothes generate a cozy nostalgia for better days. Almost equally successful arc Princess Alexandra, the dignified daughter of an English royal duke and a Greek princess, and her sister-in-law, the Duchess of Kent, a fragile blond beauty who is much admired for her graceful manners and her fresh clothes. But other royals have their

The Lowest Current Ratings

The Duke of Edinburgh, who is generally respected for having coped well with the diffi-cult problem of adapting a dominant (some would say domineering) military personality to the inevitably subordinate role of a consort, sometimes shows his impatience in an unroyal bluntness of speech. Asked why he had accepted a luncheon invitation from a group of correspondents, he replied frostily. "I had to eat somewhere."

But the two members of the family who currently get the lowest marks for their public performances are Princess Anne, the queen's daughter, and Princess Michael of Keot. Princess Anne, says a sharp-tongued young woman who moves in aristocratic circles, is "a sour and haughty woman who knows more about communicating with horses than with people." The gossip columnist of the Daily Mail, Nigel Dempster, says the beligerent young princess is the most mept of all the royals in dealing with the press. "and most people in this country form their views of the royal family from what they read in the newspapers." In a recent poll only 30 percent of the respondents agreed with the statement that "Princess Anne is very much in touch with ordinary people." Her reputation was not helped by her marriage to Capt. Mark Phillips, who has been known as "Fog" since his college days because his class-mates considered him thick.

Princess Michael is even less popular. Private Eye, the satirical biweekly, recently reported that neither Prince Charles nor the queen can stand her. (Her nickname, "Our Val," is attributed to the queen after their first meeting: "I've just met this Valkyrie.") Princess Michael is routinely attacked in the popular press and in the tonier salons of Belgravia, Chelsea and South Kensington for being "entirely too jet-setty for a member of the royal family," as one matron said; for showing too much eagerness to get her picture in the newspapers; for being a clotheshorse; for "setting out to trap poor old Prince Michael."

Until three years ago, Princess Michael was plain Mrs. Thomas Troubridge, the wife of a merchant banker. Her official biography says that she is the daughter of a Silesian baron and a Hungarian countess, but lately the newspapers have been hinting in their sly way that her antecedents might not be so noble. They have also been asking how the Kents, who are regarded as the poor relations of the royal family, can afford their new $600,000 manor house in Gloucestershire. Prince Michael, who resigned as an army officer in April, is thought to earn less than $20,000 a year, and the princess' design practice is no longer active. And then there is the continuing tut-int about his civil marriage to a Roman Catholic in Vienna, which cost Prince Michael — but not his two children, Lord Frederick Windsor, 2 years old, and Lady Gahriella, 3 months — his right of ssion to the throne.

Margaret's Special Balance

These days, the royal family numbers no rakes, wastrels or tosspots, certainly nothing to equal the lechers and drunkards of an earlier era. The example of an earlier Prince of Wales who was hopelessly dissolute by the time he became Edward VII at the age of 60, already a grandfather, and of her own uncle, the playboy Prince of Wales of the 1930s, lies behind the queen's striet upbringing of Prince Charles.

Queen Elizabeth has been equally stern (although, by all accounts, loving and supportive) with her sister, Princess Margaret, who is the closest thing to a hlack sheep produced by the family in recent generations. Badly bruised when the family refused to let her marry Peter Townsend because he was divorced, Princess Margaret married Anthony Armstrong-Jones (later Lord Snowdon), a talented and charming photographer. Together they laughed and talked and danced their way through life at the center of a group of friends unusual for royals - writers, actors, designers and musicians, rather than the usual peers and petry aristocrats. As Anthony Haden-Guest wrote at the time, "The Snowdons are hip, and the Snowdons are royal, an unnerving balance which creates its own brand of pleasurable tension."

When their marriage collapsed, Margaret took up with Roddy Llewellyn, a playboy, landscape gardener and would-be pop singer, and neglected her ceremonial duties. He was 30, she was 47, and Margaret — always the most forceful character in the family, capable of dominating a room the moment she walked into it — defiantly spent holidays with him in the Caribbean. Finally, the queen put her foot down. Margaret stopped seeing Roddy, lost weight, curtailed her drinking and resumed her duties. She is now seen by the public as a reformed sinner, won for the faith by the strong will of her sister.

Since the Germans Prevailed

Private Eye has nicknames for some members of the family. The queen is Brenda, the Duke of Edinburgh is Keith, and Prince Charles is Brian. Margaret is Yvoone, and if the name is meant to call to mind a sultry temptress, it conveys only half the essence of the woman. She is the one member of the family with an abiding interest in all of the per-forming arts, and she is probably the only one with a real intellectual bent. Prince Charles is fond of Verdi, the queen has a working knowledge of the paintings in her unequaled private collection, and most members of the family know their family's (and thus Britain's) history inside out. But even their best friends don't claim that the royals have terribly keen minds.

Unlike some predecessors, the Windsor clan contents itself with helping to preserve the ar-tistic past rather than helping to foster a flowering of the arts in the present. The queen keeps her Canalettos in prime condition, but she buys no Hockneys or Caros. It has been that way, says a disgruntled English aesthete, "since the damned Germans took over the throne.

Perhaps in part because they can almost never be offstage in the city, the royals are country people. Almost all of them are horse crazy — although a friend says Lady Diana "can't tell the hiting end from the kicking end" - and the men like to fish and hunt. Prince Philip takes part in competitions for drivers of teams of borses, Prince Charles plays polo, Princess Anne is an accomplished equestrienne and the queen runs a successful thoroughbred stable. Country life also permits the royal womenfolk, most of whom look dowdy and uncomfortable in city clothes, to dress as they like: in tweeds, Wellington boots and no-nonsense bandanas knotted firmly under their chins - a style they share these days with few people except Russian grandmothers.

Taking their lead from the Duke of Edinburgh, the royal males are terrifyingly compe-tent. They are relentless doers. The Prince of Wales, for example, knows how to play polo, to windsurf, to ride in steeplechases to command a ship, to fly airplanes, to scuba dire; to speak French, to fire a target rille, to ski, to play the cello.

A Pampered Lifestyle

In some ways the royal family leads an un-believably pampered life; they are all shielded by valets and secretaries, lords and ladies in waiting, press spokesmen and other retainers. The senior members of the family never carry money. For the queen, especially, there are endless perquisites paid directly by the government: the royal yacht Britannia, which carries 277 officers and sailors and whose most neemt refitting cost $10 million; the apprepriate property taxes on Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle, St. James's Palace and Kensington Palace in London, as well as Holygood House in Edinburgh; the purple Royal Train and the aircraft of the Queen's Flight. She pays no income tax and no investment tax, and there are no death duties on the royal collections of the two country residences that she awas personally. Balmoral Castle in Scotland and Sandringham House in East Anglia. There is also the Civil List, which this year provides about $8 million in government funds to the royal family to help defray expenses, with about $6 million of it going to the queen and the rest to 10 other members. The Ogilvys received a grant of about $190,000 plus the use of Thatched House Lodge, a royal property at Windsor, and most of the other relatives are provided for on a similar scale.

A high properties of the Carl Lies courted.

A high proportion of the Civil List goes to pay the salaries of the queen's hundreds of staff members, and it is said that she has to dip into her private fortune to make ends meet How large that fortune is depends on how one calculates her assets. Some estimates have nin as high as $200 million, but that includes the art collection, the stamp collection (reputedly the world's linest), the furniture, the soyal jewels and the country estates, none of which a sovereign could sell without causing a political

Ten years ago, Sir John Colville, who was private secretary to the queen when she was a princess, ridiculed suggestions that she was fabulously wealthy with the comment, "If she's got more than £2 million [about $3.8 million at today's rates]. I'll eat my hat." The figure is no doubt much higher now, but there are still signs of frugality in the queen's style of life. Like most grand English houses, Buckingham Palace is cold and clammy in winter, rather than improve the central heating the queen uses the same kind of electric space heaters that grace working-class flats in the East End. She doesn't set a lavish table, often eating a salad and a slice of cold meat, without wine when she is at home alone for hinch All the airplanes in the Queen's Flight are propellerdriven and antiquated.

Shedding Daylight on Magic

In his book, "Majesty," Robert Lacey says that "behind the baize door the private apartments in which the queen and her family actually live are visibly frayed at the edges, with nondescript furniture from the 1940s and 1950s among the heirlooms." And if that is the case for the queen and her consort, it is doubly true for the other royals, who regularly send odds and ends to the auction room to raise spending money. The Kents, for example, re-cently realized $114,000 from the sale of some fine old silver at Sotheby's.

The queen has made many changes in the way the royal family lives, some of which defy. another of Bagehot's dicta. He wrote of the monarchy: "In its mystery is its life. We must?" not let daylight in upon magic." Living in the the queen has felt called upon to appear on television, to send Prince Charles to Cambridge for a proper education, to broaden the guest lists for the annual garden parties at Buckingham Palace, to eliminate the presenta-non of debutantes. To celebrate his 21st birth-day, the queen permitted her second son,— Prince Andrew, who is known as "Randy-Andy" to the tabloids, to stage a bash at Windsor Castle complete with a rock band and dozens of stunning young women.

All of these gestures have created an image. of modernity of change, of democratization.

And yet the royal family remains intensely formal. Let people call Princess Margaret "Margaret," and she will stare right through them. no matter how well she knows them and what she calls them. To his friends, Prince Charles is "Sir" or "Wales." The up-to-date image, says Harold Brooks-Baker, managing director of Debrett's, is "nothing but a mirage, because these people are more obsessed with protocol than any royal family in history. They care deeply who stands where on the steps when they arrive someplace. And you can't get close to them."

If that is so, it is also true that the family is more popular than at any time in this century, with the possible exception of the last few years of Queen Victoria's reign. The Windsors may be the richest and the most famous of the 10 royal houses that remain in Europe, but its members are far from the most glamorous royal personages. They stand for calm and for sta-bility in a turbulent world. Nigel Dempster. not normally a sympathetic commentator on the rich and famous, describes them as "conscientious, dutiful, honorable, upright, the kinds of people who are courteous to servants." They often seem dull. But they are worthy people, by and large, and the British people have always valued decrease and these people have always valued decency and honor more than flair and elegance. The House of Windsor suits then, well.

Royal Wedding Procession Traversed Historic Route

By Steven Rattner

New York Times Service ONDON - The four proces-L Sions that carried the British royal family on Wednesday traversed a route of history. Three groups of coaches left Buckingham Palace, which was built in 1703 by the Duke of Buckingham and bought by King George 111 in 1762. It has been the ruler's home since Queen Victoria.

The fourth procession, carrying Lady Diana Spencer and her father, left from nearby Clarence House, designed by John Nash, now the home of the queen mother.

The 2.1-mile (3.3-kilometer) journey officially began at the Victoria Memorial, erected in 1911, and entered The Mall. Along the north side are a string of important huildings, most notably St. James's Palacc, the ruler's official residence from 1698 until 1837. The procession then passed through Admiralty Arch and continued into Trafulgar Square, with Nelson's Column in the center. The square commemorates the overwhelming British naval victory in 1805. Also in the square is the National Gallery.

At the edge of the square is crossroads where Edward 1 erected the last of a series of crosses to mark the funeral procession of his queen, Eleanor of Castile, to Westminster Abbey in 1291.

The wedding party then entered the Strand, an ancient road linking Westminster, the seat of government, with the City of London, now the financial district. Along it is the Savoy, first hotel to install electric lights and elevators. Two churches sit on islands in the middle of the street; St. Mary-le-Strand, built hy James Gibb in 1714, and St. Clement Danes, designed by Christopher Wren. At the end of the Strand sit the Royal Courts of Justice - 1882.

Across the street is the Temple Bar, entrance to the City of London. Here the sovereign must obtain permission to enter from the lord mayor, and here the Strand becomes Fleet Street, home of Britain's newspapers.

After just a few blocks, Fleet Street becomes Ludgate Hill, a short approach to St. Paul's Cathedral. A church has been oo the site since the seventh century. The present one was designed by Chris-National Gallery.

Commonwealth ties to the royal family remain finn. Canada's wedding gift was a roomful of antique Canadian furniture of the 18th and early 19th centuries, and apparently Prince Charles and Lady Diana were consulted before it was chosen. John J. Louis, the U.S. ambassador to Britain, sent as a personal gift a small oil painting by the American artist Henry Robler of Prince Charles playing polo. Cartier, the jewelers, presented a clock in Art Deco style.

Presents from British crizens had a homelier touch. They included a paperweight made by a Canterbury Cathedral stone curver from a piece of Caen stone dating from the 15th century and a silver plated mousetrap. To drink to the royal health, two cases of specially blended whisky, 1948 and 1961 vintages, were sent by a Scottish firm. U.S. to Offer Options to Russia's Gas

Europe Can't Risk Reliance, Says Haig

By Clyde H. Farnsworth New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has said the United States is continuing to urge its European allies to consider alternative energy sources, including U.S. coal, before financing a 3,500-mile pipeline that would transport Siberian natural gas to Western Europe.

He told a Senate trade subcommittee Tuesday that the Reagan administration was drufting proposals offering the Europeans greater access to coal, nuclear energy and non-Middle Eastern oil and gas supplies in bone of fore-stalling what he said might be "the possibility of over-reliance" on the Soviet Union.

The idea was proposed to the Western Europeans by President Reagan at last week's Ottawa sum-- and encountered a cool response. West German officials said that while U.S. energy sources might complement other non-European supplies, they were not a real alternative to natural gas from the Soviet Union.

Biggest Transaction

Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany has approved his country's banks' plan to cootinue negotiating credit terms with the Russians to support the project, and last Friday in Bonn a consortium of West German banks announced what was described as a broad agreement with the Soviets.

The pipelioe, which would bring natural gas from Siberia's Yamal peninsula to terminal points in West Germany and elsewhere in Western Europe, would cost up-wards of $10 billion and rank as the biggest East-West trade transaction in history.

The agreement with the West German banks, which still has to be completed in detail, reportedly involves about 4 billion Deutsche

While conceding that the United States cannot block the project, Mr. Haig suggested to the Senate panel that the U.S. alternative, combined with high financing costs, may reduce dimensions of the pipeline project "substantially from that originally visualized."

Sen. John C. Danforth, a Missouri Repubilcan and chairman of the panel, called on Mr. Haig as the last of a group of administration witnesses involved in trade matters for a trade policy review.

Contingency Plans

In discussing the energy alternative to the Soviet pipeline, Mr. Haig did not reveal what other natural gas and oil supplies might be tapped, except to say that they would not be from OPEC.

Mr. Haig said the United States and its allies had drawn up contingency plans in case the Russians intervened militarily in Poland. He warned that there could be

"damage to the U.S. economy" if the Russians reacted in turn by reneging on Soviet block debts to Western banks and financial institutions. He placed the overall debt of the Soviet and Eastern European countries at $70 billion.

"Banks could be vulnerable," he said. "Financial iostitutions of governments could be vulnerable. Clearly production in the private sector and trade levels could be af-

Kleber Colombes Will Close Plant In Reshaping of Tire Operations

PARIS - Kleber Colombes said Wednesday it plans to close its factory at Colombes oear Paris and decentralize its tire-making opera-tions in France before 1983 as part of a group restructuring plan.

Trade union spokesmen at the Confederation Generale du Travail said that the plan will cause the loss of 2.025 jobs throughout the group. The company intends to close the Colombes plant within 12 to 18 months, eliminating about 80 percent of the 1,550 jobs there, the union told a press conference.

The company gave no estimate of how the plan will affect employment. In a statement issued during a break in talks with the unions about the plan, Kleber Colombes said it also intends to regroup its industrial rubber-making activities under a new company, but gave no further details.

The company, in which the

U.S. Economic Indicators Declined 1.3% for June

WASHINGTON — The index of U.S. leading economic indicators fell 1,3 percent in June, the second consecutive monthly decline, the Commerce Department the past seven months after rising during the last six months of 1980 reported Wednesday.

The index had fallen I.5 percent in May after using for two consecutive months. June's drop in the index, which is designed to forecast trends in the economy, is in line with most analysts' predictions that there will be little or no economic growth in the July-September quarter. Economic activity, as measured by the inflation-adjusted gross national product, fell at an annual rate of 1.9 percent in the April-June quarter after racing ahead at an 8.6 percent rate in the first three months of the year.

The biggest factor in the June decline in the index was a steep drop in building permits, indicating even worse times ahead for the already slumping housing indus-

Positive Aspects

Other indicators that fell in June included prices of sensitive raw materials, the average workweek, vendors' delivery performance and the U.S. money supply. Although those declines are interpreted as negative indicators for economic strength, the news is not considered all bad. For example, the decline in the money supply could eventually lead to lower in-terest rates, and the lower prices

Hadson's Bay to Buy Mining Firm Stake

TORDNTO — Hudson's Bay Oil

A Gas of Calgary has agreed to buy a controlling interest in Cypris Asvil Mining Corp. of Vancouver for 212.4 million Canadian deliais ($173 million) from Amoso Minerals Co. a unit of Standard Oil of Indiana:

The agreement was seen as another example of how Canadian government policies greencouraging the taketser by Canadian companies of Ingelian bushed concerns in Canada.

The Calgary company said
Monday night it would pay $44.25 for each of 4.8 million Cyprus Anvil shares in the 63-pencent control vil shares in the 63-peneral control block held by Amoon Minerals and later would make a similar of-fer for the remaining shares. At that price, the indicated value of

Japan Officials Differ On Yen Intervention

TOKYO Joint intervention by major currency nations might be possible to stem the dollar rise, Japanese Finance Minister Michio

Watanabe said Wednesday.
But Haruo Maekawa, a governor of the Bank of Japan, said that although the recent yen depreciation has good too far, the central bank has no intention of stepping in to defend the currency. He added that the year's fall in the past two days was particularly attributable to dollar purchases in large lots by Japanese firms.

the offer would be $127.4 million Canada." It then makes recom-in Canadian funds.

Cyprus Anvil's lead, silver and zinc mine at Foro in the Yukon An agency spokesman in Ot-tawa said that "in 99.9 percent of Territory produces about 24 per-cent of Canada's lead and 10 per-cent of its zine, "marking it as one of Canada's major producers,"according to John Jennings, mining analyst at Nesbitt Thomson Bongard Inc., a Toronto investment

While Canada's national energy program favors Canadian control of companies by giving them ex-ploration incentives in Ironier areas denied to foreign-controlled concerns, it does not affect mining companies. The circumstances behind the sale of the Cyprus Anvil interest are not related to the ener-

Amoco Minerals acquired Cyprus Anvil Mining as part of its 1979 purchase of Cyprus Mines Corp. of Los Angeles. As required by Canada's Foreign lovestment Review Act, it sought permission for the control change from the Foreign Investment Review Agency but was refused.

With the after-the-fact permission to control Cyprus Anvil thus denied. Amoco Minerals placed the boldings on sale last May 27 through Dominion Securities, a

Milan

Three-month CD futures are now trading on the only exchange with liquidity in short-term interest rates.

The professionals who trade the IMM's T-bill futures will specify the IMM for their CD trading.

The professional traders in interest rate futures — bankers, government securities dealers, managers of institutional funds -have been trading the IMM's short-term Treasury bill* contract for years. Current volume is in excess of 20 billion dollars a day, making T-bill futures the most liquid shortterm interest rate futures contract in the world.

The relationship between Certificates of Deposit and Treasury bills is well known. The correlations between these two money market instruments result in frequent intermarket trading opportunities. For this reason, the same als who use T-bill futures will also trade the IMM's CD futures contract, generating liquidity. This insures you of rapid order filling and the best prices.

To facilitate spread trading between CD futures and T-bill futures, the IMM's CD pit has been positioned right next to the high-volume T-bill pit. This close proximity is designed to produce the greatest possible liquidity and make the IMM the dominant spread market in short-term interest rate futures.

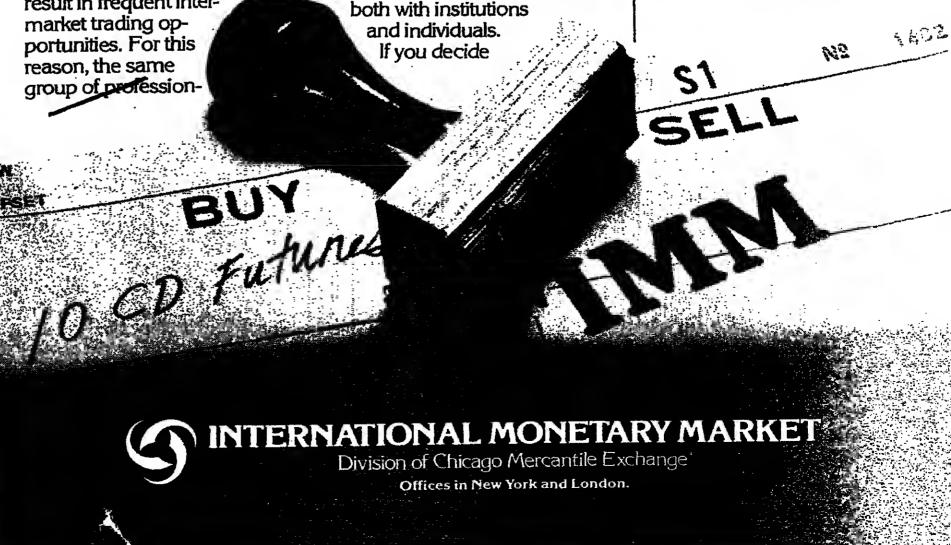

Futures trading in CD's is widely expected to be extremely popular both with institutions to enter the market, we suggest you join the professionals and specify the IMM. You couldn't be in better company.

Notice of Redemption

ENSERCH Finance N.V.

81/4% Convertible Subordinated Debentures Due 1994 Redemption Date: August 21, 1981 Conversion Right Expires: August 17, 1981

NOTICE IS HEREBY CIVEN to the holders of the 9½% Convertible Subordinated Debentures Due 1994 (the "Debentures") of ENSERCH Finance N.V. ("Finance") that in accordance with the terms of the Indenture dated as of December 15, 1979, among Finance, ENSERCH Corporation ("ENSERCH") and Citibank, N.A., as Trustee, Finance has elected to redeem on August 21, 1981 all of the remaining outstanding Debentures which have not been presented for conversion as of the date of this Notice of Redemption. The redemption price for each such Debenture is 105% of the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest from December 15, 1980, to August 21, 1981. Payment of the redemption price and accrued interest, which will aggregate $1,114.92 for each $1,000 principal amount of Debentures called for redemption, will be made upon presentation and surreoder of such Debentures. called for redemption, will be made upon presentation and surreader of such Debentures, together with all attached unmatured interest coupons, at the offices of the Paying and Conversion Agents set forth below.

After the data set for redemptioo, all rights with respect to the Debentures called for redemptioo, including accrual of interest, will cease, except only the right of the holders thereof to receive the redemption price and interest accrued to such date.

CONVERSION OR SALE ALTERNATIVES

Debentureholders have, as alternatives to redemption, the right to sell their Debentures through usual brokerage facilities or, on or before the close of business on August 17, 1981, to convert such Dabentures into the $4.45 par value Common Stock of ENSERCH Corporation ("ENSERCH Common Stock").

The Debentures called for redemption may be converted into ENSERCH Common Stock at the rate of 49.575 shares for each $1,000 principal amount of dabentures. In order to effect at the rate of 49.575 shares for each $1,000 principal amount of dabentures. In order to effect this conversion, a Debentureholder should complete and sign the CONVERSION NOTICE on the Debenture or surrender to the Paying and Conversion Ageots a similar signed notice together with the Debentures to be cooverted. A holder who surrenders Debentures for conversion will receive a certificate for the full number of whole shares of ENSERCH Common Stock to which he is entitled. No fractional shares will be issued upon conversion of any Debentures, but in lieu thereof ENSERCH will pay in United States dollars an amount equal to the market value of such fractional share computed on the basis of the closing price of ENSERCH Common Stock on the New York Stock Exchange Composite Tape on the conversion date. If more than one Debenture shall be delivered for conversion at one time by the same holder, the number of full shares which shall be deliverable upon conversion shall be composed on the basis of the aggregate principal amount of Debentures so converted. The conversion will be deemed to have been effected on the date on which the Paying and Conversion Agents receive deemed to have been effected on the date on which the Paying and Conversion Agents receive the Debentures surrendered for conversion. Upon conversion of Debentures, no payment or adjustment will be made for interest accrued thereon. Debentures delivered for conversion must be accompanied by all interest coupons maturing after the date of surrender.

From April 1, 1981, through June 1, 1981, the last reported sale prices of ENSERCH Common Stock on the New York Stock Exchange Composite Tape (after adjustment to reflect a three-for-two stock split effective on April 22, 1981) ranged from a high of $32.42 per share to a low of $25.75 per share. The last reported sale price of ENSERCH Common Stock on such Composite Tape on June 1, 1981, was $25.75 per share. At such last sale price per share, the holder of $1,000 principal amount of Debeutures called for redemption would receive, upon conversion, shares of ENSERCH Common Stock and Cash for the fractional interest having an aggregate value of $1,276.56. However, such value is zohject to change depending on changes in the market value of ENSERCH Common Stock. So long as the market price of ENSERCH Common Stock is $22.50 or more per share. Debentureholders upon conversion will receive ENSERCH Common Stock and cash in lien of any fractional share having a greater market value than the cash which they would receive upon redemption.

IMPORTANT CONSIDERATION REGARDING SALE, CONVERSION OR REDEMPTION

As described above, based upon current market prices, the market valoa of ENSERCH Common Stock into which each Debentura is convertible is significantly greater than the amount of cash which would be received upon surrendering a Debenture for redemption. All rights to Ecovert the Debentures into ENSERCH Common Stock EXPIRE as of the close of heavest 17 1081 of business August 17, 1981.

ing the Internal Revenue Service to share information with law-enforcement agencies investigating

Sen, Sam Nunn, Democrat of Georgia, sponsor of the proposal, said it was "the single most important law enforcement action" that Congress could take because it forced the IRS back into the battle against organized crime and

The bill applies, in particular, to evidence of crimes discovered in a taxpayer's financial records. Under the bill, adopted Monday night by a voice vote as an amendment to a major tax reduction hill, IRS agents would be encouraged to share such data with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Drug Enforcement Administra-

Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., Connecticut Republican, led the opposition to Scn. Nunn's proposal, saying it was an "uowise assault on the rights of privacy of taxpayers." He said Congress had sought to protect those rights when it passed the Tax Reform Act of 1976 in response to reports that the Nixon administration had used the IRS to harass "enemies."

THE INTELLECTUAL RESISTANCE IN EUROPE

By James D. Wilkinson, 358 pp. $20.

Harvard University Press, Cambridge, Mass. 02138.

Reviewed by Flora Lewis

THE shock of occupation in France and the emergence from Fascism in Italy and Germany put an acute edge on the old dilemma of the intellectual society. In each country, peo-ple responded: with anguish, with imagination, for a while with a great surge of hope.

It was clear, in a time of deep confusion — of triumph for some and dis-aster for others but, in any case, of the existing establishment's total collapse - that someone had to take responsibility for social and moral guidance. In each country, intellectuals rose to James D. Wilkinson's book is a crisp survey of how they went about it during and immediately after World War II. Although the background was quite different, the pressures were similar and the essential question was the same eternal challenge.

Are intellectuals a class apart, responsible only to their own inner-urges, and a vision of man's need that goes beyond the daily struggle and even defies it? Are they doty bound to immerse themselves in their society to articulate its conscience and its con-text? Or are they natural leaders, des-tined not only to provide the ideas that shape society but also to make sure that they are implemented?

All approaches were attempted. Wilkinsoo summarizes and explains them with great clarity:

Here is Jean-Paul Sartre, arguing the obligation of political engagement and action as the true test of values. But, as the author shows with a quick, penetrating jab of the pen, Sartre's ex-hilarating experience in the Resistance permitted him some unavowed assumptions and led to righteonsness. Sartre's existentialism never answered the problem of how good and evil might be deduced from a contrary kind of experience.

Here is Albert Camus, rebuffed from certainty by his experience and withdrawing to a tentative pessimism about the possibility of ever being sure of morality through intellect, but not unhappy about having to live with doubt. Dignity is maybe all that can

Here is David Rousset, describing the vital importance of hope and how it felt to be liberated from Buchenwald: "We never gave up the struggle, we never renounced, we never blasphemed against life. . . . We never believed in the final disaster of humanity.

Here is Dietrich Bonhoeffer, pre-pared to die for the goal of cultural survival.

Here, after the war, is Gunther Eich, when the dreams of a truly new world had faded and the choices we no longer so dangerous but also not i clear: "Be uncomfortable; be sand clear: not oil, in the machinery, of the

Wilkinson presents an immension cast, not of characters, because he scants the personal, but of thoughtful carefully articulated attitudes toward life. Of course, he points out, ultimain human drams and the immediate breath of tragedy create a special at mosphere. Everything is clearer, rv Tyone is closer. Everything that is no directly impossible seems possible.

But soon enough came what he calls "the restoration." He makes it sound as though everything slid back into the same ugly old patterns that alienated prewar intellectuals at moved them to attack bourgeois sor ety. His careful objectivity fails raise the question of whether it wijust a restoration of ordinary hur. complexity when life is ordin, when intellectuals are people am others doing their part in the diviof labor.

The admirable distance Wilkin takes from his anguished subject leaves an appetite for a conclusion the intellectuals of the Resistar failed to create a new society in t image of their aspirations, was it because the philistines did them in one, more? Or because they really weren: capable of what they imagined? because their imaginations were o torted by the very attempt at transcendence?

In the end, he leaves us wondering whether he thinks intellectuals really matter or not, except at crucial moments when they are called on for expertise — as accountants and mechanics and plumbers are all important when they're needed but other. wise merge into the crowd. The way he handles his people and the way he handles his people and his coolly judicious presentation raise the issue. But he never quite addresses it. This is a slim book, provocative and therefore finally unsatisfying.

Obviously, Wilkinson is deeply in terested in what an intellectual should.

DISPUTES in Poland are not limited to those in politics and labor unions. A recent issue of Brydz, a monthly magazine, lashed out at the Rules and Ethics Committee of the Polish Bridge Association.

It seems that in a match in Lodz between top-ranked experts one play-er made a wild leap to a grand slam when a small slam bid would have been aggressive. Two finesses proceeded to bring home the contract and the opponents complained bitter-

The basis for the complaint was that one of the successful bidders had carried the boards from the other room. The outcome was that the captain of the complaining team, following a precedent set in Italy some years ago, was reprimanded and fined, pre-sumably for being B ouisance.

In North America such episodes are the board-moving is almost always done by an official. Jim Plunkett ... In with the first influx.

Raiders' Plunkett Hopes There's More to the Fairy Tale

New York Times Sernce

SANTA ROSA, Calif. — The morning session of training camp for the Oakland Raiders, the defending Super Bowl champions, was over. Most of the players had clattered into the cramped locker room. But for one man, the playing field was vacant.

He was making several slow, almost lumbering laps around the field. His black curly hair glistened with sweat under the California sun that had bleached the tan mountains behind him. Jim Plunkett, the 33-yearold quarterback, was beginning his 12th season in the National Football League.

Down on his luck at the beginning of last season — no team was interested in him, except Oakland — he took over as the starter when Dan Pastorini, the first-stringer, suffered a broken leg. Then, in storybook styles Plunkett, the son of blind parents of Mexican-American ancestry who grew up poor in the nearby San Jose bar-rio, led what had been a struggling team all the way to a Super Bowl victory.

"It was fun again to step onto the football field — I had almost begun to dread it," Plunkett had said. "All those good feelings returned, the things that make football so exciting for me — leading a team downfield, calling the play that works, throwing the long, beautiful spiral for a touchdown."

Ouestions

Bot the season had barely cooled when questions arose: Was Plunkett a fluke? A one-shot winner? Plunkett has beard that and is determined to prove he was not. Arriving in training camp several days earlier than most veterans, he joined in the drills with the first influx — the draftees, the free agents.

He was anxious to get back into the groove, to get physically fit. He had undergone a second operation on a torn rotator cuff in his left (nonthrowing) shoulder that had bothered him since last midseason; he also suffers from a groin strain that has made running pain-Iul. "I got pretty banged up last year," he says.
In drills now, wearing No. 16 on his red jersey — the rest of the offense wears white; red is to remind the defense not to batter the quarterback in practice — the gap-toothed Plunkett barks signals, takes the snap and casually drops back to lift a successful pass.

Casually drops back to litt a successful pass.

Watching it all is Pastorini, seated nearby on a football on top of a heimet. It is not lost on him that last year his role and Plunkett's were reversed. "I know that you don't take the starting job away from the Super Bowl MVP," he says. "Not in training camp." But, as Plunkett did, he surely thinks his time will come again. Plunkett grew up believing that overcoming handicaps was as natural as scratching your ear.

At Home, a Role Model

"I remember watching my mother cook," he said, "and never thought twice about it. She knew where all the utensils were and reached for them as though she had sight. In later years, her fingertips had become so calloused from having to touch the pots and pans to learn if they were hot enough to put food in, that she was losing her sense of touch. That's when my father insisted she quit cooking. It was becoming too danger-

He talks about the love affair of his parents, who had met in a home for the blind. His father, who ran a newsstand in the unemployment office, was legally blind but could vaguely make things out.

"So he was my mother's eyes," said Phunkett. "They would walk outdoors and she would ask him to describe how bright the sun was. And when the flowers were in bloom, he told her what colors they were."

Plunkett's father died when Plunkett was a sophe more at Stanford. "I was sorry dad wasn't there when I won the Heisman Trophy" as the country's best college football player in 1970. "And after that, when I was picked first in the NFL draft. He'd have liked that

But He Reached Out . . . '

"But I'll never forget one moment with him. I was a senior in high school and we were going to the National Football Foundation dinner in San Francisco, at which I was one of those honored. My dad was wearing a tie, for one of the few times in his life. We were waiting for my coach and principal to pick us up with the car. My dad was a very quiet man, not very communicative. But next year, under Tom Flores, the new coach, he reached out and held my hand, and said, 'Son, I'm appeared briefly in four games, throwing 15 passes.

proud of you.' He signed with the New England Patriots and was their starting quarterback on opening day, highly unusual for a rookie.

He was big for a quarterback then — 6 feet 2 inches, 210 pounds — and he had an unusual throwing style, overhead, with a short and snappy motion, more like a baseball catcher's than a pitcher's. But it was effective. He could throw surprisingly long and quickly. He threw 19 TD passes and was named rookie of the year in 1971. His future seemed fantastic.

But in the next four seasons, neither the Patriots nor Plunkett got better. Plunkett has said that the harder he tried the worse he seemed to get. He was blamed and booed for the team's failure to rise in the standings. He was traded to the San Francisco 49ers.

The 49ers, who like the Patriots provided poor pass protection, had two losing seasons. Plunkett, once so supremely confident at quarterback, became tentative and self-doubting. In 1978 the 49ers tried to trade him. With his record and his high salary - $175,000 a year - no team was interested. He was put on waivers. No one claimed him and he was given his release.

Others Were Confident

"My mother had wanted me to quit football. She didn't want me to get hurt and she was always stung when people said negative things about me. I guess no mother likes having her son called a bum in print. But friends of mine were encouraging, they said I'd been a victim of circumstances and that they knew I could still be a good pro quarterback. It seemed that they had more confidence in me than 1 did.

But that's what I wanted to hear. And I wanted to end my career on the up side."

Hat in hand, he appeared at the Raiders' training camp in 1978 for a tryout. It was humiliating for a veteran to have to audition. But Al Davis, the Raiders' managing general partner, and John Madden, the coach, were impressed. They signed him as a backup quarterback to Ken Stabler, then the first-stringer.

Then, 1980. Plunkett's confidence was restored, "I was throwing well and I wanted to play," he said. "I asked to he traded. I was running out of time. I was a veteran of 10 years and I wanted to show what I could do. That I could be a winner." The Raiders had made a remarkable trade, sendin Stabler to Houston for the Oilers' regular quarterback, Pastorini. And Plunkett saw himself going nowhere. But the Raiders began the season slowly. They had two victories and two losses going into the fifth game. Then, against Kansas City, Pastorini was tackled and his leg

"PlunketL" called Flores.

Plunkett feit he was ready. He was confident: The one and only pass in a game he had thrown that season was completed for a touchdown against San Diego. But against Kansas City, Plunkett proceeded to throw five interceptions. "I thought to myself, "Ob God."

Still, he started the next game, against Pittsburgh. This time he hit on 12 of 14 passes and one touchdown in a 38-24 victory. "Looking back," says Plunkett, "1 don't know how I was able to keep calm on the field. I knew that my whole season — maybe my whole career — revolved around that game."

With Plunkett as the starter, the Raiders would win I3 of their 15 games.

The first time the Raiders got the ball in the Super Bowl, Plunkett directed an attack that ended with his throwing a scoring pass. Soon after, he whipped a side-line pass to halfback Kenny King, completing an 80yard TD play, the longest in Super Bowl history. At game's end, Plunkett had completed 13 of 21 for 261 yards and all three Raider touchdowns.

Federal Mediator Urges Binding Arbitration in Strike sion, there's only one other solu-tion — binding arbitration."

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Federal mediator Kenneth E. Moffett said Tuesday he still believes binding arbitration is the best way to resolve the baseball strike, now 48 days old.

Moffett, who Wednesday ordered owner and player negotiators to return to the bargaining table Thursday afternoon, said binding arbitration would provide "a quick fix that would get everyone back on the field immediately. or at least in a week."

When the players association proposed submitting the issues to binding arbitration two weeks ago, the owners' negotiators rejected the idea. But, Mossett said, "There's no such thing as a dead position in collective bargaining. They can all be resurrected."

The Reason

Moffett said he has had no indication that either side had changed its position on arbitration. "The reason to suggest it is that apparently neither side has changed [on compensation]. We've had heavy-duty mediation, heavy-duty recommendations [the mediator's pro-posal]. We brought in the secretary of labor.

York. "I can't tell you what will happen at that meeting." Williams said. "All options will be canvassed. That [binding arbitration] is an option. It, like other things, will come up.

Lee MacPhail, American League president, agreed the subject would be discussed, but doubted that owners would change their position because, he said, "I do not think the majority of the elubs want il."

Williams and the 13 other

American League team owners were to meet Wednesday in New

After the American League meeting, the full membership of the Player Relations Committee, the 26 clubs, was to convene, Some m management expect little to come out of the sessions, at least publicly.

After the players' show of strength Monday night in Chicago, the thinking in some quarters is that the owners will have to make a similar showing or risk looking weak. Others, citing the volatility of the situation and some of the bargaining process has totally owners involved, disagree. "Firefailed. If you come to that conclusion, there's only one other solu-

'More Divisiveness'

Steve Greenberg, a player agent who has been acting as an infor-mal go-hetween in the negotiations, said, "It's going to be very different from the last ownership meeting (July 9). There was a lot of speculation that there was yelling nd I understand there was none of that. At this point, especially since the American League will be buoyed by meeting separately, there will be more divisiveness openly expressed."

It is no secret, as Greenberg points out, that the majority of [the American] league says, 'Ler's get something done.' The question is whether they get squashed by the relatively solid block in the National League,"

The question of binding arbitration came up after the last owners' meeting and was not discussed by the 26 owners before it was rejected. "There was no chance to give it a glimmer of thought," Greenberg

By his estimate, the split in own-ership is now 15 for the Player Relations Committee and 11 against; those who are generally hard-liners on the compensation and credited service issues, he says, are not likely to be moderate on binding arbi-

But, he said, "One owner told me, 'If we're so confident of our position, wby not submit it to binding arbitration?" One reason, sources say, is that an arbitrator likely would take the two sides' last positions and split the difference down the middle, giving the players too much of a victory in management's eyes. Moffett proposed arbitration before the strike began June 12, and several times during the course of negotiations, before the players reversed their position and decided to advocate it two weeks ago. Moffett said be had spoken Tuesday with Ray Grebey, the owners chief negotiator, and that Grebey was available for a bargaining session but had not requested any, Moffett had not spoken with Marvin Miller, the executive director of the players association, who is in Los Angeles for the first of the regional player meetings. Moffett said no negotiations have been scheduled and be would chance to meet Wednesday.

From Los Angeles, Miller said,
"We've never taken the proposal [for arbitration] off the table. We've reiterated it on several occasions, most notably Monday

Who Knows?

Asked if arbitration represents the best solution to the strike, Milter said, "It is a solution. Is it the only solution? That I can't tell

There also was speculation that the owners might decide Wednesday to name a date by which they would call off the season in an attempt to pressure the players. But several management sources said they seriously doubted that would happen.

"I don't think we'll do that," one said. "The players then could argue. 'You canceled the season as of Aug. 15, you have to pay us because you foreclosed the possibility of a settlement."

MacPhail said: "People talk about it [naming a season-ending date], but I'm reluctant to put a date on it. That is utter defeat, and I don't want to accept defeat."

Castle's Administrator Is Its Resident Ghost

By Susanne M. Schafer

The Assectated Press TUSSEN, West Germany - Julius Desing's castle is his the. The bearded Bavarian lives Neuschwanstein, the famed tairy-tale castle, hristling with turreis and lowers, that was built in the Alps a century ago by the ec-centric King Ludwig II.

With a cheerful grin, a tough eve for the bottom line and a flair for helping people have fun. Desing has been resident administrator of the castle-turned-museum for 18 years.

"If there's a ghost in the castle, I'm it." Desing, 53, said with a chuckle. "When you see a light moving through the halls late at night, it's me."

Perched alop a stone pinnacle 600 feet (220 meters) above a rolliog green meadow, the castle appears to floar on a dark forest with a hackdrop of snow-dusted mountains. It looks the castle of Walt Disney's "Fantasyland" - or vice versa since Neuschwanstein came first — and Desing said most American tourists tell him this image was what drew them to Neuschwanstein.

Gesturing at the mouotain scenery from his arched office window in the castle's "lady's chambers." Desing said the young King Ludwig "allowed his dreams to blossom" by huilding the castle. Ludwig directed the construc-tion from 1869 uotil his mysterious drowning in 1886, three days after he was deposed for alleged insanity. He spent only 120 days in his castle and died at age 41.

Wagnerian Decor The king was mesmerized by the operas of Richard Wagner, some of which were based on medieval legends of knights and their ladies. He had the castle designed in a flamboyant style to recall those heroic figures.

Many of the walls are painted with scenes from Germanic mythology and Wagner's operas, and the swan from Wagner's "Lohengrin" appears woven into draperies, carved in wood and even as the gilded water spout on Ludwig's hathroom sink. It took seven woodcarvers four years to make just the Gothic oak flowerets that form the canopy above the king's bed. It was my wife's dearest wish that we could live in a castle, and I was able to make it come true."

said Desing.

He and his wife, Hanna live in the castle gatehouse, which con-tains the original oak paneliog and parquet floors, similar to those in Ludwig's private apartment, it has been remodeled to allow for ceotral heating, electric lighting and modern plumbing. The Desings' two children are grown and on their own. "I love it here, but if people think this is a dream job, well, all that glitters isn't gold," said Desing. Coping with the 1,200 tourists an hour who stream through the 90-room castle in the peak season is "a challenge," he said. Ludwig's family opened the private residence as a museum several weeks after the king's death. Last spring the castle recorded its 20 millionth visitor. More than half of these have come to Neuschwan-steio in the last 15 years. Desing said. About 60 percent of them are German-speakers, and Americans are the cext largest group, about 15 percent of the total,

Tours are given in German. English and French. Tape recordiogs in Dutch, Italian, Spanisb and Japanese are available, while Swedish and Russian are being prepared. Desing said. As castle director, he said, his two biggest worries are fending off souvenir hunters and protecting the public in case of fire.

"Some people try to take a thread here, a little screw there. Replacing an original screw — one little, old screw — can cost 100 marks!" (about $50).

The castle has been refurbished to add fire doors and escape routes from the upper floors, as well as alarms and extinguishers, Desing said. Plans are "in the works" to install closed-circuit television to protect the castle from overeager souvenir hunters. Despite the 30-minute climb up the steep, winding road to the cas-tle, visitors seem eager for the 30minute tour through Ludwig's private quarters, Desing said. He noted that one of his easiest jobs is regulating the number of visitors.

When they see several hundred people in line, they just walk back down the hill," he said. "It takes care of itself,"

Art Buchwald is on vacation.

The Rising Star of Swoosie Kurtz

Actress Hits Her Broadway Stride After Two-Year Detour to England

By Robert Berkvist New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Her dressing table is awash in the tools and talismans of the theatrical trade, from cold cream to congratulatory telegrams, from artful wig to throatsoothing yogurt and herb tea.

There are, however, some mementos that instantly mark this clutter as belonging to one, and only one, New York actress. Three inscribed certificates - from the Outer Critics' Circle, the Drama Desk and the Tony Awards — attest to the special gifts of the inimitably named Swoosie Kurtz. Kurtz made her clean sweep of Broadway's major prizes at the New Apollo, where she is in residence in Lanford Wilsoo's bittersweet comedy "Fifth of July." Her performance as Gweo Landis, a pill-popping heiress-cum-rock singer with a vocabulary as colorful as her frizzy mop of flame-red hair, has garnered a set of reviews that any stage mother would be proud to cast in bronze.

"It's such a miracle we're bere," she said as she stirred a mug of tea. "Let's face it. it's a miracle to have a straight play on Broadway for more than two nights, especially when it's not British. Besides, I've been in too many plays where I've gotten love letters from the critics and then the play has gone pffit."

Favorably Re-Reviewed

Wilsoo's play, about the reunion of a group of '60s activists, one of whom has been crippled in Vietnam, opened on Broadway to a mixed reception last fall. However, the show was favorably re-reviewed after a major cast change several months later — Richard Thomas replaced Christopher Reeve as the Victnam veteran — and now seems destined for a lengthy run.

Kuriz - ber first name rhymes with Lucy, not woozy, and comes from the nickname of the bomber her father flew during World War II, a wearisome explanation she has almost resorted to having printed on husiness cards — looks at the flamboyant role of Gwen as almost a therapeutic experience. "It gives me the nerve to say and do things I would never have the nerve for otherwise," she said, giggling, "I'm much too cautious and circumspect and basically shy."

She said she does not particularly identify with Gwen, nor, does she find it necessary to dredge up parallel feelings within herself in order to hring off a successful stage portrait. "I was oever into drugs or the Berkeley type of campus demonstration," she said. "I was sheltered from that, or maybe just too ignorant to know what was going oo in the world. In any case. I assimilate a part all at once. It just comes in at me.

"I work from the outside in, which is not to say I work externally. That's very looked down upon by a lot of actors. I learned a lot from my two years in England, where I studied at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art. I learned to get right on with it in rehearsal, to simply have a hash. So that's what I do, with total commitmeet. And then I work backward, to figure out how and why things happen."

Kuriz said she is not much for elaborate theories and emotional analyses. "It's what-ever works for you," she said with a shrug. "I think that's true of a lot of the younger actors these days. We're more eclectic. I'm a great one for the physicalization of character. I ma great can't just sit and muli over how I'm supposed to feel, If I do that, nothing happens. But if I can get the way a character walks or talks, or even sometimes if I can see my costume, then I'm on my way."

She recalled rehearing "Tartuffe" in 1977.

Cast as Mariane, daughter of Tartuffe's chief virtim, Kurrz was having trouble entering the world of Molière. Finally, she said, the direc-tor. Stephen Porter, told her to imagine her-self moving about on a little wheel, instead of feet. "As soon as I tried it, I knew it was the handle I needed," she said. The 1977-78 season was a crucial one for Kurtz. Having made an impression in "Tartuffe." she moved on to the play that brought her before a mass audience: As a sex-ob-sessed would-be writer in the Phoenix Theater production of Wendy Wasserstein's "Uncommon Women and Others," Kurz very nearly stole the show from a gifted cast. "People still stop me on the streets to talk about the show," she said.

Kurtz elosed out that season in Christopber Durang's musical spoof, "A History of the American Film." The show quickly joined ber "pillt" category, but her own re-views were first-class. Her season's labors brought her a Tony comination for "Tartuffe," an Obie and a Drama Desk nomination for "Uncommon Women" and a Drama Desk Award for her singing and dancing in

Virginia Woolf Revival

In the spring of 1980, she journeyed to the Long Wharf Theater in New Haven to play the secondary role of Honey in Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" a revival that started Mike Nichols and Elaine May. "It was one of the greatest experiences of my life." Kurtz cited that performance, in particular, as evidence of her dramatic range.

She relished the challenges of that play and "Tartuffe" and said she looks forward to performing in more classics. "Td like to do some Shakespeare, especially. I never had any interest in the roles everybody wants to play — Juliet, for example — hut I would like to play one of King Lear's daughters, or maybe do The Taming of the Shrew.' On the other hand. I don't have a list of roles in mind as landmarks for me to hit. I just take on each one as it comes along. "I just missed the ingenue trap, and then suddenly this whole different side of me flared up and I've done a string of neurotic, foul-mouthed women. But people tell me I'm almost unrecognizable from role to role, that they don't see Swoosie up there, but Gwen or some other character. That may actually keep me from becoming a recognizable star, but it's exciting to me."

Kurtz recently finished work on a small part in the film "The World According to Garp." She is hoping for another film role soon, "something major" that would do for her what "Kramer vs. Kramer" did for her friend Meryl Streep.

Was her two-year training stint in England worthwhile? Yes and no. Training abroad meant a certain estrangement from the U.S. theater scene and that, she said, was a disadvantage for a beginner. "When I came back to New York from London, I knew no one, and no one knew me." She watched the sour-ing careers of others and thought, bitterly, "They know all the directors, and they all know each other. I know zilch,"

"It took me a long time to catch up," she said, "But I'd always had this dream about going to an English drama school. And I really don't think you can get that training anywhere in America — the training in voice, diction and movement. But then, I'm like a sponge. I'll take advice from anybody. If an usher tells me, 'Gee, Miss Kurtz, I really liked the way you did that scene tonight,' I'll listen to what he's saying and maybe it will be something I can use."

U.S. Naval Reserve Officer Gary

Hart, who is also U.S. Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, plans to sail with the Navy in the Indian Ocean next week. His office says Hart will make the five-day trip as a factfinder for the Senate Arrival Services Committee and as a lieu-tenant j.g. in the Navy Reserve. The Democratic senator has said he wants to learn more about the status of U.S. Navy forces in the Indian Ocean and Gulf. Aides said he will study how the forces could defend Middle Eastern oil supply lines, and how long tours of duty affect Navy personnel. The trip will be financed by the committee. Hart's aides said that his senatorial status would allow him treatment not normally afforded a reserve officer, but that he planned to try to keep a low profile.

Michelle Triols Marvin, who sued actor Lee Marvin in a land-mark "palimony" trial, has been fined $250 and placed on six months' informal probation for shoplifting. Miss Marvin, 48, pleaded no contest to mis-demeanor petty theft in Beverly Hills, Calif. Prosecutors said she tried to steal three sweaters and two brassieres from a department store last September. In April, 1979, Miss Marvin was awarded $104,000 in her palimony suit against Marvin, Miss Marvin, who lived with Marvin for six years, sued the actor for half his fortune, claiming she was entitled to the same benefits as a wife. Marvin is appealing the award.
